The Adventures of Kathlyn, No. 2

THE TWO ORDEALS, in two reels—Kathlyn, the unwilling occupant of the throne of Alaba resolved not to wed the villain Umballah at the request of his creatures the Council of Three—is forced to submit to two ordeals. The first, as human bait in the leopard trap—the second to meet a horde of hungry lions in the amphitheater. How she escapes these terrible perils makes these wild animal scenes extraordinary.

A resourceful American girl, alone in far India in the hands of a race of fanatics, compelled to occupy a throne, she still defies them when they attempt to marry her to a man she detests. Her blood curdling experiences in thwarting their schemes, while seemingly complying with them, are thrilling beyond compare.

means—getting the judgment of the voters of the county on a given proposition. We believe that this county never will have just such an opportunity again. The plans for the new building have been adopted, the cost is known to a cent and there is nothing hidden or concealed about the project in any particular.

This building will practically cost the county nothing as under the plan the funds will simply be diverted from one fund to the building fund and no extra levy will be made. The taxes will be the same whether the court house is erected or not. The proposed building is large enough for this county and will prove ample for many years to come. The amount is about right for a county of this kind.

The thing for each voter to do is to realize that perhaps his vote will decide the question and then vote as he honestly thinks is right for all concerned. In our opinion we should vote for the proposition.
