That sunflowers use three times as much moisture as the corn plant is a fact recently found to be true at the Nebraska Experiment Station. After comparing several corn and sunflower plants during the growing season, up to September 1, this year, it was found that the average amount of water used by a corn plant was four fifths of a barrel, weighing 300 pounds. The average amount of water used by a sunflower was two barrels and a keg, weighing 952 pounds. From this it would appear that the farmer can well afford to keep down not only his sunflowers but all other weeds which are robbing the soil of moisture needed to grow a crop.

Fanning Does Not Increase Wheat Yields After testing the effect of fanning wheat for 12 years and of fanning oats for 9 years for seed there appears to be no advantage in such a practice from the viewpoint of increased yields, according to experiments conducted at the Nebraska Experiment Station. Yields of wheat for 12 years averaged: Heaviest seed planted 35.5 bushels; original unfanned seed, 35.5 bushels; lightest seed planted 35.0 bushels. Yields of oats for 9 years, averaged: Heaviest seed planted, 54.5 bushels; original unfanned seed, 54.5 bushels; lightest seed planted, 54.0 bushels. The slight difference of one half bushel is considered negligible and well within the possibility of experimental error. These data correspond to similar tests for 14 years at the Ohio Experiment Station. On the other hand, a fanning mill may prove a profitable investment for use in eliminating injurious weed seed and other foreign matter, when present.

We don't force you to take a chance on a house and lot, nor an automobile, neither do you get trading stamps and when you get three million of them you may get something.
