Judge Was Likely Dead Right When He Told the Elderly Lady About His Gown.

The judges of the Marion county courts recently adopted and published rules relating to formal openings of court sessions, requiring all persons in the courtroom at the time to stand. This and the other requirements are designed to insure dignity and decorum.

An elderly woman employed at the courthouse accosted one of the judges in the corridors of the building and complimented the bench on its attitude in conducting court.

"In fact, judge," she added, "I think all of you judges ought to do like some of the big eastern courts and wear gowns."

Without batting an eye the judge replied: "I do wear a gown about one-third of the time."

"Why, I never saw you in one," the woman said.

"And you never will," gravely answered his honor as he proceeded to his courtroom, chuckling to himself.—Indianapolis News.

Incident of Wall Street That We Publish Without Any Affidavit as to Its Truth.

There was a man in Wall street, employed as thirty-second assistant cashier in a bank. It took the bank directors several weeks to discover who was talking to the financial reporters about certain things supposed to be known only to insiders.

Upon learning his identity the directors immediately advanced him to cashier, on the theory that his new responsibilities would preclude his conversing with outsiders on important matters. But it didn't work. The cashier was in a more favorable position to relay important things to the financial scribes. He was promoted to a vice presidency. He talked louder and more frequently.

In desperation the bank directors made him president of the institution. It worked wonders. He stopped talking. Thereafter he spoke only through prepared statements, and while they were long and windy they revealed nothing disturbing.—From Life.

What Well Dressed Women Will Wear

Fashion Induces the Flapper.

THE wisdom of the arbitrary goddess of fashion is often in question, but that irresponsible and erratic deity goes on her wayward way, often side-stepping the axioms of good taste. One of those axioms is that young girls should be simply dressed—and, to the joy of the flapper, fashion has seen fit to ignore it—for a while anyway. She is indulging the younger girls in their hearts' desire—clothes like those of their grown-up sisters—not to speak of mothers and grandmothers. The flapper is usually in need of something to make her happiness complete and now she has it in luxurious frocks and coats for evening. These rich trappings are beautiful, but lack the flavor of youthfulness, which is a more appealing charm than any other.

Frocks for everyday wear include many pretty models that are not too much fussed up to be youthful, although they reflect the mode for decoration by following it at a little distance. These are the most important of the young girls' belongings and two of them, as illustrated in the picture, may be worn with the assurance that they are both good style and good taste. At the left, a frock of gabardine in dark brown is ornamented with rows of stitching in beige-colored silk and narrow brown silk braid. The skirt is gathered into the waist, but folded at the sides to form a panel, defined by rows of cloth-covered buttons at each side. The ingenious waist reveals a little blouse at the waistline of figured beige satin across the front and back. Stitchery, like that on the skirt, appears under the arms at the sides and as a finish for the three-quarter length sleeves, and covered buttons in a row at each side add the charm of neat precision to a very clever waist.

The other dress of blue serge makes the most of accordion plait, small bone-buttons and Roman-striped ribbon. Stripes cut from the ribbon bind the collar and sleeves and a sash about the hips makes a spirited, youthful finishing touch.

Fine Feathers in Millinery.

IN ALL the representative displays of hats for winter much plumage and much manipulation of plumage are in evidence. The all-feather hat is always a part of the autumn millinery parade, but it has never appeared in such numbers or in so many combinations and colors as this fall. Feather and fur hats are usually small and expensive. This season finds a generous sprinkling of larger shapes among them, and as compared to other millinery they contrive to be less expensive than heretofore. This country has always supplied great quantities of raw feathers and during the war may have learned to rely on home manufacturers instead of sending feathers overseas and importing the hats made of them. It takes a great deal of work to make a good feather hat, hence we ought not to expect low prices on them.

Three of the hats shown above are made entirely of feathers. Curled and uncurled ostrich plumage grows every day in favor and the uncurled variety covers the brim of the hat at the top of the group with a crown of even more popular hackle feathers. Just below it at the right a velvet shape has a wide, upward flaring brim covered with slightly curled ostrich plumes. A handsome tam at the left is entirely covered with hackle, arranged in light and dark stripes, the dark stripes running through rings made of the light feathers. A turban with indented coronet finishes this group of representative feather hats.

TWO KINDS OF ADVENTURE KILL OWN CHILDREN AT BIRTH

New Yorker Who Offered to Sell His Life's Services Already Has Had Takers.

Jack Hardy, a former sailor, living in New York, who advertised that he was ready to sell his services for the rest of his life to the highest bidder who had a career of useful adventure to offer, has received two bids.

A woman offered him $5,000 to be her bodyguard on a trip to Egypt—"providing the trip was successful." Jack doesn't think he'll take this, not being certain what the woman regards as a successful trip to Egypt. The other offer was from a man and his wife who described themselves as the wealthiest couple in Scranton, Pa., wanted Jack to help hunt for their fifteen-year-old son with $5,000 and adoption as the reward.

That is more promising, the young man thinks, but he has reached no decision yet. He is twenty-two years old. "I'm not looking for a soft berth," he said. "The harder the job, the better I like it."

Ariol of Tahiti Look Upon Attempt of One of Their Order to Raise Child as Sin.

Lovers of laughter, song, music, flowers and birds, the Ariol of Tahiti killed their own children at birth, and looked upon the attempt of a member of their order to rear a child as a sin. While religious causes were given for this by the leaders and, no doubt, believed in, the real cause, Frederick O'Brien tells in the Century, was a natural one whereby the species, to prevent over-population of the South sea island, destroyed its own. With perfect health and no enemies, the island would soon have had a hard time finding food.

The Ariol were wandering minstrels, actors, priests and wonder workers to which belonged both men and women. The natives of Tahiti who have escaped the blight of civilization are living proofs that at one time the race was one of the most beautiful in the world's history, while investigators declare that arts and civilization were brought to a high plane hundreds of years ago.
