CONFERENCE AT LINCOLN
I fell to my lot to preside over a conference at Lincoln the latter part of the week. In this conference was County Agent E. R. Davis of Hastings, Lynn Sheldon of Osceola, George Davis of St. Paul, K. C. Foutz of West Point, L. I. Frisbie, State Club Leader, and Ed. Danielson, Secretary of Nebraska State Board of Agriculture.

As a result of this conference, Nebraska boys and girls will be given separate buildings on the fair ground to exhibit their pigs, calves, poultry, etc. The pig and calf show will come on Monday. The 1st and 2nd prize in each class will automatically enter themselves in the open class, thereby eliminating all the confusion of the past and still a comparison will be had of the junior show with the open class.

The Stock Judging contests will be held on Saturday. Ribbons and medals will be given to individual contestants and entrants to the winning team in addition to the prizes of last year.

The rules and regulations adopted at the Lincoln meeting are workable in the counties and same should be used.

ACCREDITED FARM FLOCK
Need—The average Nebraska hen produces 70 eggs a year and consumes approximately 90 pounds of food. A hen that produces 110 eggs consumes little more food than the low producing hen. Low production can be eliminated by breeding, selecting, feeding and management.

What is an Accredited Flock? An accredited flock is one which meets the following requirements:

1. All hens that show (a) marked inferior egg production (b) a lack of breed characteristics (c) disease (d) inferior size; culled before November 1st.

2. A flock of 50 producing birds, standard bred within the breed and variety.

3. An average production of 85 eggs the first year; 100 eggs average the following year.

4. Males used in breeding shall conform to the breed characteristics and have egg production blood lines representing not less than 125 eggs.

5. Hens shall be fed for egg production.

6. Management of the flock shall be such as to promote the most environment.

Object—To increase economic poultry production through the formation of accredited flocks of known performance.

Method—If you are interested in having your flock accredited, write for blanks.

HENRY R. FAUSCH
County Agricultural Agent.

RED CLOUD WANTS

AT THE PUBLIC CRIB

The Bladen Fair Association is seeking to resist the attempt of Red Cloud to mooch $1,000 of the $2,000 levy for county fair purposes. Under the law, $2,000 is the portion the county commissioners shall pay over to the county agricultural society. It is paid for the purpose of paying agricultural premiums and permanent improvements for "such fair, and for no other purpose." That the law was intended solely for county fair purposes, is apparent in the reading of it, but Red Cloud, in promoting the Farmers' Institute, has called upon the county board or supervisors to divide the pot and as will be seen elsewhere, the county board has so ordered. The Webster County Fair officials are resisting the order and have taken the matter up with the attorney general. On its face, it would appear by reading the law, that there is intended, no such distribution of county funds for any such purpose as the $1,000 given to the Farmers' Institute Association. That organization has at its back a source of free contributions by the state, independent of a cash donation from the county—something the county fair does not enjoy and it would seem that Red Cloud is seeking to lug home a major portion of the bacon levied against the taxpayers of the county, for "agricultural fair purposes."—Blue Hill Leader.

In justice to the County Commissioners and the officers of the Farmers Institute we feel that the statement that "Red Cloud wants to mooch $1,000" should not go unchallenged. The law contemplated the appropriation of this $2,000 for the encouragement of agriculture, live stock breeding, better poultry and the improvement and advancement of the various industries constituting the resources of the state. Any fair minded man must concede that the Farmers' Institute is for this purpose specifically and exclusively. It not only conforms in every particular to the things contemplated by the law in making the appropriation, but no admission fee is charged, making it possible for everyone, with out expense, to enjoy its educational advantages; there are no doll racks, fairs, bunches games or hamburger stands connected with it and nothing to detract from the primary object of the Institute, that of encouraging our citizens in the better ways of earning a livelihood, increasing the resources of the state and our general improvement as a commonwealth. In all fairness the Farmers' Institute is certainly entitled to half the money appropriated for this purpose from the taxes collected in Webster County.

What Other State?

It is not difficult to surmise that the most luring opportunities are at some other place—in some other state, across the mountains, in western Canada, in the Gulf Coast section, or down along the Mexican border. In the first place, the publicity put out by these interests directly concerned in the development of such remote sections is skillfully prepared and calculated to appeal to the hopeful imagination of every individual. And it does, and in doing so, has the effect of emphasizing in the minds of the reader the obstacles which he encounters in his daily rounds in the conduct of his own business.

The beautiful colors of the rainbow and the mythical bag of gold cannot be wholly ignored. The haze of distance softens the view, but always, regardless of the place, as one draws near to the actual scene and undertakes to work out success there are found the obstacles which attend the way of industrial folks on the earth. It does not matter where. Anyone who assumes responsibilities finds these inevitable obstacles to be overcome. Yet, it is doubtful if any man familiar with Nebraska conditions having a knowledge of the resources which the state affords will find any section anywhere presenting as few of these obstacles as this dependable state of Nebraska.

One need not hope to obtain anymore for his investment when all things are considered—soil fertility, climate, production, schools, markets, variety of adaptable crops, and last, but not least, neighbors—in any other state or country than surround him who dwells in Nebraska.

There is no other state that will serve the purposes of a Nebraskan like Nebraska. It is well not to lose sight of the value of the first-hand knowledge of the resources and responsiveness of the soil combined with the climate, a knowledge of the business methods and the social tendencies of the people. These have an actual and important bearing on one's success. It is rather significant how frequently the disappointments arise when one undertakes to do business or work out success in sections where one does not have a reliable familiarity with the practices and tendencies of the folks or of the various conditions that relate to one's line of endeavor. The lure is always there—at first—but somehow it often fades from the vision of him who lacks the necessary information to enable him to make his investments and direct his efforts wisely.

It should not be understood that success—fortunes, achievement, distinction, and all the long list of desirable realization—cannot be obtained far from the home threshold, but it is well not to lose sight of the fact that these are all attainable in the region adjacent to the old home. The most valuable possession is knowledge, whether applied in business or profession. Knowledge of natural conditions, of resources, of climatic tendencies, of crop possibilities, is the chief asset in the inventory of most men.

There are possibilities beyond the dreams of men in Nebraska. There are successes for untold numbers. The state's resources are in the process of development, in the initial stage. To him who knows Nebraska there is no other place that favorably compares. This is his land of promise.—Foresight.
