The colors of most gems are more or less fugitive. That is, under certain circumstances they are liable to fade. Take two rubies exactly similar, shut one in the dark, and leave the other exposed to full sunlight, and at the end of two years there will be a distinct difference between them. The one that has been exposed to the light will be decidedly paler than the other. Similar results may be observed with both emeralds and sapphires. Garnets also will turn lighter, while in the case of the topaz, sunlight ends by dimming and dulling the color of this pretty stone.

Gems Affected by Light.

Ireland's Many Names.
 Scots may be surprised, but in the days of Ptolemy Ireland was known as Scotia! In fact Ireland has had a number of names. Diodorus Siculus calls the Ireland Iris, or Irist; in the De Mundo, credited by some scholars to Aristotle, it is called Iremne; in the Argonautica of Orpheus it appears as Irlinus; Strabo called it Irene; Caesar, Tacitus and Pliney mentioned it as Hibernia; Mela called it Juverna. The native names in Celtic are 'Ir, Eri, Erin. Plutarch mentions it under the name of Ogygia.

How Logansport Was Named.

Among the relics preserved at Terre Haute, Ind., is a target rifle that was, it is said, the means of giving Logansport its name. The story is that a number of frontiersmen, being unable otherwise to reach a decision on the matter, decided to shoot at a target to determine what name should prevail. The marksman who proposed Logansport hit the bull's-eye.

A Great Artist.

Sir Henry Layard had a short way with omniscient youths, who gushed over Cimabue, Giotto, Daniele da Volterra. "Do you seriously think," he would ask with his rasping drawl, "that any of them can compare with Mortadella da Bologna?" Some would fall into the trap and discourse on the chiaroscuro of that great artist; others, more honest, would invite scorn by confessing ignorance of his work. It was only when they reached home that they discovered that "mortadella" was a sausage.—Living Age.

Impartial.

An English clergyman, Father Black, spent a great deal of his time visiting prisons and trying to reform the inmates. On one occasion a house-breaker said to him gratefully: "I must thank you, sir, for what you have done for me. There was a time when I knew nothing of God or of the devil, either, but somehow you have made me love 'em both."

There Is a Winning Way

From far out on the plain near the border line of Colorado and Wyoming, many miles beyond the accepted western boundary of the cornbelt, one may journey eastward across Nebraska, Kansas, Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio and eastward still, into New York and Pennsylvania, among cornfields of near-boundless area and enormous yields all along this twelve hundred mile course. The northern extremity of this corn producing region is lost beyond the Canadian frontier and the southern boundary is defined by the breakers that ran inland from the Gulf of Mexico. Not all of this expanse is devoted to maximum corn production, but throughout most of it corn is the main crop reliance.

It has been an exceptional corn year. Many cribs are already filled to overflowing with the hold-over surplus of the preceding year. Corn there is in such abundance as we have not known in a score of years. Yet, as its golden yield expands in volume its market value declines. Only disappointment awaits the grower who transports his corn to the elevator. He will have no joy in the process.

But there is a method of marketing which if applied will assure a doubling up of prevailing prices to the grower and add to his resources otherwise. This method is known as "marketing on the hoof," a plan adaptable to any farm whether of limited or extensive acreage; one that commends itself to all corn producers. There is the stover, the silage, the stalk fields, the unused pasturage and hay, all unsalable or of low market value.

Good livestock will turn these products to profitable account and place the disheartened corn grower in the way of prosperity, for the waste growth of his land will acquire a value; his acres will be enriched. Corn will provide the weight and fatness that have recognition always at the market places.

The abnormal days incident to the war are no more. Mixed husbandry must have its safe and useful part in farm operations, affording the channel through which the products of the soil, of which corn is chief, may be marketed from year to year with certainty of a margin of profit. The investment costs favor the buyer. There is no other way assuring the same measure of cash return and permanency.—Foresight.
