French Marriage Customs Change

Many Girls Happily Wedded After Being Won in Fashion of English Sisters.

Number of Educated Gentlewomen Who Are Earning Their Living Is Increasing Every Year-New Occupations Are Open.

London.-French parents know no better than English parents what to do with their daughters, writes a Paris correspondent of the Times. When marriage fails, or is unduly delayed, action becomes imperative. Formerly, marriage was the invariable remedy; today there are not enough men to go round, and girls must look for some alternative to wifehood and motherhood when they leave school.

An aim in life is essential. Their and turn reluctantly from matchmaking to the choice of a career. The girls are less reluctant, because they do not despair of finding a husband and are glad to think they may meet him and choose him for themselves.

Sometimes their dreams are realized, and there are many happily married women in France who have been wooed and won in the English way. They met their husbards through their work. The numbers of educated gentlewomen who are earning their living, or preparing to do so, increase every year. The liberal professions include many qualified women. There are a few notable cases where women are associated with big business concerns, hitherto only run by men. In agriculture women sometimes direct their estates, but there is no general feminine movement towards outdoor manual labor. Women gardeners can be counted on one hand; farmers are al-

Upholds Modern Mothers.

Mme. Leon Daudet in her recent book, "Comment Elever nos Filles," puts herself on the side of modern mothers in such things as sport and liberty of thought "within measure," but is opposed to the idea of women taking a part in politics, law, medicine or business. She does not believe they will find happiness in a public career: "La veritable vie des femmes est a la maison." She would have her daughters accomplished in fine arts and fine manners, charitable, domesticated, "sachant composer un menu et au besoin l'executer." They should excel in well chosen sports, and in their late teens Balzac's novels might be set before them.

In all they do they should be watched over and guarded. For daughers so educated marriage is the only desirable end. They are ill fitted to go out into the world.

M. Pierre Soulaine in his novel, "La Rue de la Paix," draws a vivid picture of a girl brought up in this way who is forced eventually to earn her living. It does not offer an encouraging outlook, and one feels the girl who must earn her livelihood needs something more than the education which even a delightful and virtuous home can give. She emerges from Her

Child Falls in Oil Well and Is Drowned

Electra, Tex.-"Daddy-Daddy, help me!" were the agonizing cries which came from the ten-inch opening of an oil well here. Rescuers worked frantically, but the narrowness of the hole, which was 180 feet deep, handicapped their efforts. It was a race with death which lasted five hours, but death won. Rising water in the hole drowned the child before grappling hooks were fastened into the clothing and the body was drawn from the well. The child was Lee Gandy, four. He stepped into the opening of the well. shell too much of a woman to stand

That there are French women who understand that their daughters must be better armed for life is evident, but they belong more generally to the petite bourgeoisie than to the grande bourgeoisie, or the aristocracy. Not until quite lately have women of the upper classes contemplated taking up paid work outside their homes, and the prospect confounds them. Many mothers would like to see their daughters married unsuitably rather than not married and forced to earn their living.

New Occupations Open.

The result is the girls of today are turning their eye to occupations which hitherto have been forbidden. The cinema has many attractions for them: It is easier than the stage. The latter is evidently from a correspondent who is discouraged by New Jersey mosquitoes and wants to try something else. Inquiries of this type, including questions on the temperature, climate, rainfall, and similar factors of weather which affect living conditions, business, or work in some distant locality, are taken care of by the climatological division of the weather bureau. The inquirer is usually supplied with printed data giving a great many facts about the section he is interested in, as well as a letter answering his spe-

Sallors Spend Weary Months on Coast Waiting for Rescue-All on Verge of Starvation When Picked Up

Houston, Tex.-A strange tale of adventures in the wilds of South America, of shipwreck and weary vigil on the coast was told recently by Captain Whittemeer of the Mount Evans.

"It was in 1893, during the days of the sail boats," Captain Whittemeer said, "that I had what probably was the strangest adventure of my history. "I was very young then, and had been to sea only a few years. I was still with the St. James, a sailing ship on which I set out for my first voyage. "On this voyage we were out of Rio de Janeiro for Valparaiso.

"We had been out several days-I forget the exact number-when a gale hit us. We tried to stay safely out from shore, but all efforts were futile. For three days we were battered and torn by a heavy sea, and on the fourth our vessel was cast on a reef near what is now known as Good Success

When we saw that the ship was doomed we decided to leave her. "We went overboard in lifeboats and rowed for 20 miles up the coast. "We built a fire and waited for morning. It was terribly cold. Our clothing was wet and fear was felt for several of the men.

Watch Interests Indians. "When morning finally came we decided to split into two parties. One party was to take the boats and try to reach the coast guard station, the other was to return to the ocean beach. "I happened to be one of the 13 to return to the beach.

"We had gone about 15 miles when we were stopped by a river. It was not wide nor deep, but it was very swift and great pieces of ice floated on it.

"We were still standing on the bank of the river when we saw a band of Indians coming toward us. I stood close to where they emerged from behind a small knoll, so there was nothing for me to do but await developments. The others ran.

"The Indians surrounded me and looked me over curiously. For some time I was undecided what to do. I was frightened. The Indians were reputed to be cannibals. Then a woman in the band noticed my watch fob.

"I took out my watch and gave it to her. I was surprised to find that it was still running. The ticking noise proved interesting to her, and she directed the attention of the whole band.

"The rest of the party observed that I was having no difficulty with the Indians and started back to me. As they drew near they came in for a great deal of comment from the Indians, but there were no indications of violence.

"I walked slowly away from the Indians. No effort was made to stop me. When I had drawn a short distance away I halted and motioned the others to follow me. They, too, left the Indians without difficulty.

Live on Grasses. "Afterward we learned that these Indians were known as the Terre del Fuego Indians. Their name was derived from the land in which they lived, dubbed Terre del Fuego by sailors, because of the peculiar blue light that shone over the Islands at times. The Indians were no clothes except a loin belt, despite the extremely cold weather. The belt they obtained from the skin of a Gunaco, a species of deer that thrives in that territory.

"We lived for several days on what few grasses we could find and upon a small shellfish, something like a clam. We found these growing on rocks,

"About a week later we reached St. John's lighthouse. That is a coast guard station for the Argentine government, but a boat calls only once every three months. For five months we waited for a boat to call. During that time one of our comrades died from exposure and the rest were on the verge of death by starvation when we were picked up by the coast guard boat Amatio. We found out that a revolution had taken place in Argentine and that it had been necessary to take off all the coast guard boats.

"We were taken to Ooswar, the most southernly port in the world, and stayed there for about a month before we finally caught a boat to San Francisco again."

Lace Curtains for Fish Nets.

Portland, Ore,-Crowds of Portland people flock daily to the banks of Sandy river, 14 miles from here, to fish for smelt which are now running. Hundreds of automobiles are parked daily along the highway and traffic officers are needed. The smelt are so numerous that big hauls are made with all sorts of Improvised drop nets, ranging from bird cages to lace curtains.
