MARRYING MOTHER

By LOUISE M. ADDELSON

(), 1922, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"It's a terrible situation," said Doctor Pratt. "It is," admitted his wife, sadiy.

"And I don't know how we can remedy it. If only dear mamma were not quite so dictatorial!" "One would think," ruminated the physician, "that she was the doctor and I the office boy. If she doesn't like a patient's looks, or manners, or expression, she refuses him admittance; says I'm out, or sick, or dead; anything to make it certain that he will never call again. And Shepard, across the street, only too anxious as he is, to grab my practice!"

"But what can we do?" wailed the doctor's pretty wife. "We can't deny her a home, can we? Poor mamma!" "Poor me! Poor you! Poor children! But cheer up, little one, I have something in view.

"Something in view?" repeated Mrs. Pratt, uneasily.

"Don't worry. It's not murder or banishment I'm contemplating for your dear mother. What I had in mind was matrimony."

Mrs. Pratt, who was not wholly without humor, smiled. "Who is it?" "Alwyn Pratt, my uncle. Since his wife died, a year ago, he's been very unhappy for lack of some one to scrap with. I'm in hopes that your mother-" Mrs. Pratt laughed in spite of herself. "Edwin, that's not nice of you. Mother will never marry-least of all a member of your family. You know

"I know her. Therefore I'm bringing Uncle Alwyn to dinner tonight. Good-by, dear. Some of the patients your mother couldn't drive away are waiting for me to see them."

Mrs. Colwell, Doctor Pratt's motherin-law, dressed for dinner that evening with the satisfied air of one whose time has been well spent, as indeed, it had been. "Mother, dear," said Mrs. Pratt, timidly breaking in on Mrs. Colwell's pleasing reflections, "I hope you don't mind if we-if we have company to night?"

"Company?" Mrs. Colwell stared in credulously, "Company, and I not know it? Who is coming?"

"Edwin's uncle, Mr. Alwyn Pratt-a very nice old gentleman, Indeed." The door belt rang sharply. The dinner guest had arrived. Mr. Alwyn Pratt was a bandsome old gentleman, with white hair, and sharp, black eyes that twinkled mysteriously as he shook hands with his nephew's mother-in-law, His eyes continued to twinkle, in spite of the glare with which Mrs. Colwell favored him.

The dinner was a nervous affair. "I would like," said the uncle, "a little more pudding, if your gracious mother would be so kind."

Mrs. Colwell's outraged feelings could be repressed no longer. "I am curious," said she, "as to what a member of the Pratt family knows David Simpson about manners, gracious or otherwise." .C. C. Stout "Hm!" said Mr. Pratt, with a chuckle. "Not much, maybe. Just Address Margaret Ellen Brown enough to know when they are missing. Sorry you don't like the Pratts. ma'am. Our people don't show fheir feelings so plainly. We proved it when my nephew here married your daughter. Not that we were disappointed in the little lady, bless her. She's everything that could be desired. But we disapproved of-of her connections." W. H. Kimberly

, "Her connections!" Mrs. Colwell gasped. She was the only living relative of her daughter. "Her connections! Why, I considered it the disap pointment of my life when my daugh ter married Doctor Pratt! Don't you boast about your family! One of them is a rascally barber!"

"Oh, madame!" protested Uncle Alwyn. "Don't say that! Joe's not a rascally barber. A more painstaking and affectionate man I never saw. He's shaved me for years, and I know, The soul of honor, Joe is, I'm not ashamed of him. It might be a good deal worse, For example, he might have been a horse thief?

Mrs. Colwell turned a fleep purple Her daughter rose, hastily, but Doctor Pratt restrained her. "Don't worry. Everything is going fine," he whispered. Mrs. Colwell's furious voice filled the room, "It isn't true that my grandfather stole a horse. He had bought the horse, and-" "Dear lady," said old Alwyn, bland-ly, "did I say your grandfather stole a horse? Far be it from me to make so vulgar a statement. I didn't know your grandfather. I didn't even know the horse. Moreover-'

"You-you-at least you can't deny that your uncle was one of the worst gamblers in the city. He-Doctor Pratt seized his wife's hand and drew her from the room. "The courtship is in full swing," he

Old Mr. Pratt spent a delightful eve ning, and called again the following week. Nor, to her daughter's surprise, did Mrs. Colwell object to his coming In three months they were married. The bride explained, to the satisfaction of all. "He never stays long enough for me to show him where he is wrong. Under ordinary circumstances I wouldn't think of marrying him. One of that family! But it's the only way I'll succeed in convincing him that his mother's uncle kept a butcher shop and short-weighted his customers; and there's another matter about a lady

A MAN'S NAME

BUSINESS man said the other - day that it was a serious error for a would-be business man, especially a salesman, to forget the name of the unimportant little Mr. Nobodyin-Particular from Not-Much-of-Anywhere with whom he was trying to do business. No man likes to have you forget his name. If the man is important and is used to receiving attentions then he doesn't notice your oversight so much, but the small man who gets little notice in the world feels especially sensitive about it and is especially gratified when you go out of your way to remember him. Often, however, when you are introduced to strangers it is physically impossible to get their names. This is partly due to the fact that we Americans are prone to speak indistinctly. Now the best thing to do when you have not heard a man's name distinctly is to make amends for this failure within a short time. Ask some one who knows the man what his name is. Better still go to the man in question and say: "I didn't quite understand your name. Will you set me right?" It is better to do this than to wait until you have to introduce the stranger to some newcomers and then to have to pause in making your introductions to ask the newcomer what his name

A salesman who remembers customers' names is always an asset. And don't believe there is any special knack about it. It simply requires a little attention. Just think about the name the first time you hear it. Think about the name in association with some certain feature of the one to whom it belongs. A celebrated detective who has a phenomenal record for remembering faces and in telling them under different disguises makes a point to remember some one distinctive, unusual characteristic. If you wish to remember names try associating the name with some one strong characteristic of the face. It is a matter of habit more than anything else and you will find that it will make you popular and may eventually lead to striking success. (by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Dangerous Symptoms. Ma-I think we'd better call Doctor Jones. Freddy has a severe pain in the head.

Pa-Oh, pshaw! He's had that so often before.

Ma-Yes, but never on a day when he's free from school.

Mrs. Pratt kissed her mother and
