THE LEGEND OF CHEYENNE

IT SO happened that among the Chosen People there lived one man and one woman who remained true to the Manitou, and who were given warning of the punishment that was to come upon the evil spirits who dwell in the valley of the holy mountain. And so this man and this woman, warm in the Manitou's smile, built a canoe from the stalk of the maize, which in those days grew to great size and thickness.

When the storms came and the floods and the winds swept the earth, they floated for many days in this canoe; and with them on other stalks floated beasts and fowls. Finally, when the floods subsided and the winds ceased and the rains no longer fell, they floated to the summit of the mountains, and there their canoe rested.

When they had rested, they ate freely of the wrinkled kernels of the yellow maize and then they prayed the Manitou for their deliverance from the waters and the storm.

When the Manitou looked down from heaven and saw this man and this woman, and the beasts and the fowls, he became sad, and his heart was filled with pity for those who fled the sea and reached the holy mountain. So he loosed the dragon thirst, a monstrous beast, which plunged into the tide of waters and drank and drank until the earth was dry to walk upon, and only the rivers and the lakes were left as before the floods came.

When the Manitou saw the earth rapidly drying up he became afraid and bade the dragon cease, lest not a drop of water be left. And then he commanded the dragon to arise and return to his cave in the dark recesses of heaven.

But when the dragon tried to arise in answer to the Manitou's command, he was too full, and as he attempted to get to his feet he fell forward on his face, a crushed and shapeless mass. And he was unable to rise and go on, and so the greedy monster died, for the weight of the water was too great.

There he lies to this day with his wrinkled sides and his horny back exposed to the sun, and his stony face looking southward and to the east, where comes the mist that savors of the sea. And as he lay there the sun parched his skin until it wrinkled into great crevices and his horned back became more rugged than ever, and his horns, pointing toward the sky, stand forever as a monument to Manitou and his might.

There he is today, lying with his face toward the sea and his tail toward the peak that leads the way to heaven, just as he fell and died at the Manitou's command. When the Chosen People returned again and saw the wonder that the Manitou had wrought, they called it Cheyenne, and the mountain they called Cheyenne mountain, for it was of tremendous size and resembled the rocks and the earth.

Those who do not believe can go and see, for there the dragon lies to this day with his face toward the sea and his tail toward the great peak, and the two horns of his head stretching clear above the body and into the air, like the horns of some evil spirit.

Scatter Apple Seeds.

From Maine to California you can see where forests once grew how these forests have been destroyed. Mighty stumps and smoldering trunks still attest to the magnificence of the trees that are gone. Whole tracts of country are barren, where these forests were destroyed, and nothing put in their place so that the rain and the winter frost broke and washed away the very soil, and rocks and desert lie where once splendid trees stood in their noble beauty. If the men who killed them root and branch had had something of Johnny Applesed in their hearts, they would have used these forests wisely and with love, and today trees would stand where trees stood, and the wounded land be whole.

Carry with you as you go on through life a pocketful of apple seeds, or their equivalent. Perhaps you will not see the fruit of the tree you planted, but fruit there will be. What you do for America will be done for her, not for yourselves. Yet the doing will wonderfully enrich your own lives, for such is the law.—Hildegard Hawthorne, in St. Nicholas.

Five of a Kind.

At curious variance with the practice of parents who delight in marking their offspring by out-of-the-way appellations was the custom of the dukes of Beaufort and the earls of Shaftesbury. The eighth duke of Beaufort named all his five sons Henry after himself and his predecessors in the dukedom with one exception, while the five sons of the seventh earl of Shaftesbury were christened Anthony, a name borne by the present earl's two sons.

If You Need a Medicine You Should Have the Best

Have you ever stopped to reason why it is that so many products that are extensively advertised, all at once drop out of sight and are soon forgotten? The reason is plain—the article did not fulfill the promises of the manufacturer. This applies more particularly to a medicine. A medicinal preparation that has real curative value almost sells itself, as like an endless chain system the remedy is recommended by those who have been benefited to those who are in need of it. A prominent druggist says, "Take for example Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, a preparation I have sold for many years and never hesitate to recommend, for in almost every case it shows excellent results, as many of my customers testify. No other kidney remedy has so large a sale."

According to sworn statements and verified testimony of thousands who have used the preparation, the success of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is due to the fact, so many people claim, that it fulfills almost every wish in overcoming kidney, liver and bladder ailments, corrects urinary troubles and neutralizes the uric acid which causes rheumatism. You may receive a sample bottle of Swamp-Root by parcel post. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and enclose ten cents; also mention this paper. Large and medium size bottles for sale at all drug stores.—Advertisement.

The Honest Teacher.

Seven-year-old Johnny's mother had given him a handkerchief to give to his teacher as a Christmas present, but when Johnny was told about it he curled his lips in scorn and said: "Aw, mother, I don't want to give it to her. She won't let me do nothin'. It's always Walter and William that get to do ever' thing. Let them get her a handkerchief. I'll give it to Miss ——— (his last year's teacher). She's honest."

Wild With Excitement.

At a football game I had a place in the bleachers one seat below an athletic classmate.

The invading team took the lead early in the first quarter, with the result that the crowd stood to cheer the home fighters on a little stronger. I was wild with excitement.

At last we forced over for six points. "A touchdown!" I shouted, and, swinging around, drove a gloved fist into my friend's coat front.

What was my horror to discover that my friend had exchanged seats with a pretty co-ed.

"I'm down, all right!" she gasped, struggling back out of the arms of a portly man above her.—Exchange.

The Way Out.

He was a keen business man, but a painfully poor golfer, and, despite constant calls upon the expert advice of his caddy, the greater part of the round had been badly fozzled.

With the ball lying in one of the course's worst bunkers, he sat down and tried to cover his despair by a pretense of consulting his diary before replying to the old question, "What would you advise, James?"

This time the caddy deliberately misunderstood. "If ye cut straight frae here, sir," he said, "ye'll manage the 4:15 express."

MINISTERS MEN OF MEDICINE SURELY WOULD HAVE TO GO

Both in England and America Clergyman Acted as Doctors in the Seventeenth Century.

Some of the medicines dispensed in the Seventeenth century were fearful and wonderful concoctions. Human skulls, bones, human fat, mummies, etc., were freely prescribed. At the deathbed of Charles II a preparation from a human skull was administered.

The education of the pharmacist at this time was largely based on his trade experience, although some knowledge of Latin was required. The apprenticeship lasted from five to six years, and at the end of that time he became a "journeyman." On assuming control of a pharmacy as a proprietor, he was required to pass a supplementary examination.

Pharmacy in America during the Seventeenth century was largely based on English usages modified by practices derived from the Indians. In Massachusetts, a great many clergymen practiced pharmacy for a means of livelihood, while preaching. Indians and old women also practiced it. The witchcraft epidemic brought the practitioners of pharmacy into suspicion as selling poison for spells.

Matter of Dismissal of Stenographer Simplified by "Insult" Conveyed in Unqualified Statement.

Mrs. Carter dropped in at the office for a few minutes' chat with her husband.

"John," she remarked, "I think you had better discharge that stenographer you have now. I am sure she is trying to flirt with you ever since she has been here."

Mrs. Carter, when she said this, thought the stenographer was safely out of hearing—but she wasn't! She stepped to the door of the private office and vented her indignation:

"Madam, I'll have you know that I wouldn't flirt with your old husband for a million dollars!"

Mrs. Carter was aghast. "Now, John," she exclaimed, "you simply must discharge that girl! She has insulted you!"—Kansas City Star.

Japanese Poetry Contest.

"Mountain Cloud at Dawn" is the subject chosen this year by the emperor of Japan for the annual poetry contest. In the days of the Kyoto court, only court nobles and poets participated, but now anyone can contribute. The best poems are read to the emperor. Verse making has always been one of the national pastimes of the Japanese people. Emperor Meiji used to compose a poem every day, and his consort also left a collection of verses.

Nerves of Steel—

The successful man of today is clear-headed, self-reliant. His keen eye and steady hand result from abundant, self-controlled energy, and steady nerves.

Such a man can overcome difficulties because he is physically fit. Foolish habits of food and drink have no place in his scheme of things. When he finds that coffee disagrees he promptly changes to healthful POSTUM.

This pure cereal beverage is not only free from the health-disturbing drug element in coffee, but there's comfort and satisfaction in its delicious, full-bodied flavor.

You'll find Postum a factor for Health.

"There's a Reason"

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.
