

Everybody's Tuning In.

Here's a neighborhood group listening in at a radio concert at the Louis Dickery soft drink establishment, 2200 Military avenue. Dickery (at left in the picture) installed a receiving set with megaphone attachment and has found it an excellent business booster.

These radio enthusiasts are the officers of Omaha's only radio club, organized two years ago by 12 boys of the Henry W. Yates school. Left to right: Durant Rice, vice president; Lane Axtell, president; Barton Hamiton, secretary and treasurer.

Miss Fave Durkee, 3831 North Twenty-third street, is one of Omaha's fair frolickers with wireless.

The radio "game" is for any number of players. Above is John H. Negele, 3845 Hawthorne avenue, enjoying it solitaire.

Every radio fan in Nebraska and hundreds in neighboring states know WAAW. That's the call for the Omaha Grain exchange broadcasting station, which has been sending out concerts in addition to market quotations and crop bulletins. The picture shows the broadcasting apparatus. The voice of Frank Taylor, speaking into the receiver, can be heard by all stations within a radius of 1,000 miles tuned in for WAAW's sending wave of 360 meters. Taylor and Ray Rainbolt are in charge of the station.

Gould Diets, Omaha globe trotter, thinks he may be able to satisfy at home some of that longing for the far away. He's installed a radio receiving set in his suite at the Fontenelle hotel and expects to hear the popping corks of Havana and the lapping waves on the beach at Atlantic City. Photo by Ernest Bihler.

Officer John H. Phalen of the Omaha police force is acquiring experience in preparation for the time when police calls will be sent and received by wireless. It's a time not so far distant at that, police officials believe.

This receiving set was constructed by J. E. Gatchell, 1314 South Thirty-first street, at a total cost of 35 cents. Under favorable conditions it will record from a distance of 25 miles. Photo by Gatchell.

"Bob," pet of Lane Axtell, 119 North Thirty-second street, appears to be enjoying his first acquaintance with radio.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Selby enjoying one of The Bee radio concerts at their home, 616 South Thirty-first avenue. Notice the interior antennae on the wall, back of Mr. Selby. This receiving set is one of the most complete in Omaha.
