Remedial Railroad Legislation of Any Kind Barred Until Next Session of Congress.

By GEORGE F. AUTHIER.
Washington, June 18.—(Special.)—The house interstate commerce committee has called a halt upon any attempt to change the Esch-Cummins transportation act during the present session, or to enact radical railroad legislation of any kind during the present session of congress. Similar action has already been taken by the senate committee on interstate and foreign commerce. The result is that the transportation act will stand until the next congress and changes made in it then will be dependent upon the trial that has been given it.

Remedial Measure Proposed

The Nicholson-Hoch bill, by Senator Nicholson of Colorado and Representative Hoch of Kansas, proposed to nullify by remedial legislation the effect of the decision recently written by Chief Justice Taft, bearing on the Wisconsin passenger rate case. In this case it was alleged the intrastate passenger rates fixed by the Wisconsin commission were too low as compared with the interstate rates on the same roads to traffic passing through the state, to enable the state to pay its proportionate share of the transportation charges which the Interstate Commerce commission was compelled to fix in order to earn the percentage allowed under the Esch-Cummins act.

Brookhart Attacked Bill

It does not follow that amendments to the Esch-Cummins bill will not be made in the forthcoming session. President Harding has expressed it as his belief that the bill should be changed in many respects. The victory of Col. Smith W. Brookhart in Iowa, one of whose senatorial campaign slogans was an attack upon the entire legislation, has given encouragement to the opponents of the present law.
