

Candidate for Senate Opens Campaign Tour

R. B. Howell, in Lincoln Speech, Opposes Cancellation of Debts, Favors Soldier Bonus.

Lincoln, June 22.—(Special.)—R. B. Howell of Omaha, candidate for the republican nomination for United States senator, delivered the opening speech of his formal campaign at the Lyell hotel here this evening.

Mr. Howell reiterated his stand in favor of prohibition. He opposed the cancellation of debts owed this country by foreign nations, favored adjusted compensation for soldiers, urged greater business efficiency in the conduct of government, defended the direct primary and declared his willingness to co-operate with the so-called farm bloc in congress.

As to the tariff, Mr. Howell said: "I am for a rational tariff policy, but against any schedule devised for the purpose of fostering or maintaining a monopoly. In fact, I believe that tariff legislation should be so framed as to destroy monopoly where possible."

In opening, Mr. Howell called attention to the reduction of government expense by the Harding administration left the country burdened, he said, by an unprecedented debt. It was the result of the war, but the same cause also brought on the business depression and this last can no more be charged to the republican party than to the democratic party.

Withstanding this, however, he continued, "the degree of prosperity we are enjoying is such as to be the marvel of economists at home and abroad, and it is coming to be recognized that prohibition—one of the compensations of the war—is largely responsible. Prohibition was a result of the war and, if we cling to it without flinching, this country will ultimately be repaid beyond all the cost of the war."

Charges Profrigate. The United States government, under the Wilson administration, dealt in the most profrigate manner with the money raised by liberty loans, charged Mr. Howell. Loans were made to European nations, he said, without exchange of bonds and without basis which leaves us now not only without payment of any considerable part of the principal but with but a fraction of the interest.

"We should deal fairly and justly with these nations," said Mr. Howell, "but ultimately we should collect every dollar of that debt." Speaking of the soldier bonus, Mr. Howell said: "Must Depend on Volunteers."

Mr. Howell reviewed the railroad situation at length. Regulation by the Interstate Commerce commission has developed a point where a guaranty of railroad profits is quite as much the purpose as protection of the public, he declared. He urged a restoration of competition at the one means of avoiding the necessity of government ownership.

One Course to Pursue. "It may be ultimately," he said, "that we shall have to consider government ownership, that the railroad capitalist will force us to have. In such case there is just one course to pursue—take over one of the great lines, not all of them. The government must develop knowledge of railroad operation by trial, not by starting in on a big scale at once. Furthermore, the operation of one line would force down rates of privately-owned lines and also reduce the price at which the government could buy them at the proper time."

Mr. Howell also recommended that government be prohibited from labor. He said: "It is not our business to interfere with the rights of labor."

(Continued From Yesterday.) The morning after she had told Violet she had finally broken with Mr. Green of Omaha, candidate for the republican nomination for United States senator, delivered the opening speech of his formal campaign at the Lyell hotel here this evening.

His sallow face flushed when he saw Olive. He came forward with nervous eagerness, rubbing his hands. One would have thought at the very least that she was a duchess come to the express purpose of buying up the entire stock, judging by the look of pleasurable anticipation on his face.

The poor little man had passed a wretched night. He had not slept a wink. He had bedewed his pillow with costly tears. He had arisen at dawn and penned a despairing letter to Olive, which he destroyed as soon as it was finished, possibly because he realized it was a futile appeal.

There was no doubt that he was generous in love with her. He admired her more than any woman he had ever seen, and—as he proudly reminded her—he saw many, many women during the pursuit of his duty. Olive gave him a careless good morning as he came up to her, she greeted him as she crossed one of his back and the way she rubbed his plump hands. She had told him plainly the previous evening that she was sick of him, and it was no more than the truth. She was sick of him, but she thought he might still be useful.

"I'm sorry to trouble you, Mr. Green," she said conciliatingly. "I hope you are not very busy, but if you have a moment to spare—" Mr. Green protested that all his life was at her disposal. He had hundreds of times before. If he had not it would have been a good deal better for him. Olive hated what she called "crawling worms." She would have been the slave of a man who could master her. Unfortunately, she had not come across one.

"I don't want your life," she said with a not unkind laugh. "I only want a little bit of it, at least. Can you find out for me where Ronald Hastings, of Violette's lives—his private address, I mean?" Mr. Green began to stammer a reply. In an instant he had seen a formidable rival in Ronald Hastings. He was insanely jealous of every man who looked at Olive. He gathered up her skirts and flew down the stairs.

If Olive had expected to find Leslie Martin an interesting character, she was disappointed; he looked painfully ordinary and unimpressive as he stood on the top doorstep of the flight leading up to the front door, and twisted a somewhat shabby bowler hat in his hands. He turned eagerly at sound of her footsteps, from a somewhat melancholy scrutiny of the street; his face brightened as he met the curiosity of her dark eyes.

"I asked for Miss Ingleby," he said. "I know, but she's out. She's a great friend of mine. If you care to leave a message—" Olive brought the battery of her eyes to be upon him, but Martin seemed unconscious of the arch glance that had so enslaved poor Mr. Green of the ribbon department.

"He answered almost curtly. 'Thank you, I don't care to leave a message; I will call again. What time will Miss Ingleby be at home?' 'I don't know; she is very erratic. The last few nights she has been very late.' Olive laughed meaningly. She implied that there was an excellent reason for Violet staying up so late; she flushed, she felt a sudden tightening of his heart strings; he had thought of Violet with disturbing frequency since he had last seen her; he moved away abruptly and returned the shabby bowler to his hand.

"I will call again," he said as he went down the steps. Olive looked after him with chagrin. "No message," she asked shrilly. She was dying with curiosity to know what his errand could be. "No, thank you," he was on the path now. He looked back at her. "Thank you all the same," he added reluctantly.

Olive smiled. "Oh, please don't mention it—I am sorry Miss Ingleby is out; if I can do anything for you at any time, I shall be pleased. My name is Olive Hale." She broke off; a girl turned the street corner and was hurrying breathlessly towards the house; she stopped dead when she saw Martin. Her face went dreadfully white.

Martin hurried towards her; he said something in an undertone which Olive could not catch, but Violet answered him with a voice of high-pitched nervousness. "How dare you follow me here? You gave me your word you would leave me alone. I only ask for five days. What do you want?" She became suddenly conscious of Olive's presence. She stood silent, white and trembling. Olive turned away and went slowly back up the stairs to Violet's room; she felt excited and interested; she was positive now that something serious was the matter. Violet had not looked white and shaken for nothing; she lit a cigaret and sat down in the one easy chair to wait. Ronnie had finished his bread and milk; he was nodding sleepily over the empty basin. Olive eyed him with a mixture of amusement and contempt. She could not bear children; she had never willingly held one in her life; for the second time she reluctantly admitted, however, as she looked at Ronnie, that he was very pretty.

Bugbear of Radio Now in Atmosphere

"Strays" and "Summer Static" Play Intermittently With Wits of Wireless Bugs.

June is the month of "summer static," nature's own wireless transmitter, also known as the bugbear of radio.

Static is more troublesome to the more sensitive receiving sets where several steps of amplification are used. It is more prevalent in summer, due to the higher temperature of the air. Heat electricity is formed in the air and gradually collects upon the antenna until a sufficient charge has been built up to break down the natural resistance of the receiving set.

Another cause of static is the close proximity of two clouds, one of which is charged with negative electricity, the other with positive. The resulting spark discharge sets up a chain of highly damped oscillations which are impossible to tune out. These "strays," as they are called, are much more prevalent on long waves than on the shorter ones used by the broadcasting stations.

Close Tuning. No practical method has yet been discovered that will eliminate static, although there are ways by which it can be avoided. The most common method is by the use of a very loose coupling between primary and secondary of the receiving transformer. By tuning the secondary into very close resonance with the primary at such frequency at which reception is desired, the signal will readily pass through—but moderate strength static of no definite wave length will pass through to ground without affecting the secondary circuits in respect to which it is out of resonance.

Another method of reducing static is by the use of an antenna of small capacity—but one that offers only a small surface for "strays" collection. An antenna having one wire will have this effect. A loop antenna will almost entirely eliminate horizontal static (that which comes from long distance, caused by a distant storm). This will not overcome local static, however.

WAAW Friday. Friday's radio program by The Omaha Bee and the Omaha Grain Exchange station, WAAW, is as follows:

8:45 A. M.—Market reports. 9:00 A. M.—News bulletin. 9:15 A. M.—Market reports. 9:30 A. M.—News bulletin. 9:45 A. M.—Market reports. 10:00 A. M.—News bulletin. 10:15 A. M.—Market reports. 10:30 A. M.—News bulletin. 10:45 A. M.—Market reports. 11:00 A. M.—Baseball scores. 11:15 A. M.—News bulletin. 11:30 A. M.—Bea concert.

Sparks. For the beginner in radio, "Radio Receiving," published by the MacMillan company, is recommended. The little book answers the universal question: "How can I receive radio?" It tells in nontechnical language the various set-ups for radio sets from the simplest to the most efficient.

Questions. A. G. K. & Missouri Valley, Ia. Q.—What is the wave length of a single wire aerial 120 feet long on a pole 20 feet from the ground? I can raise one end to about 40 feet from the ground. Will it do it? A.—The wave length should be about 120 feet. This need not take the height of your aerial unless you can do it with a little trouble as the results may not be commensurate with your labor.

Man Arrested on "Blue Sky" Count Freed on Bond

Head of Cere-Blend Company and Aged Father-in-Law Assert Innocence.

Dr. G. F. Bartholomew, president of the Cere-Blend company, arrested Tuesday night on "blue sky" charges in connection with the sale of benefit certificates in the company which was said to have planned erecting a plant in Omaha, was released by County Attorney Shotwell on $1,500 bond signed by Dr. A. C. Stokes.

J. H. O'Keefe, also arrested in the case, is 80 years old, with sunken cheeks and flowing white beard. He is Dr. Bartholomew's father-in-law and was released by County Attorney Shotwell on his own recognizance.

J. F. Naylor, secretary of the company, is on his way from Dodge City, Kan., according to Shotwell. O'Keefe told Shotwell he did not know he was doing anything wrong, that a paper was placed before him which he was asked to sign and he signed it.

Bartholomew told Shotwell he is innocent of any wrong doing, that he merely was obeying instructions from the National Organizing company of Chicago and was given to understand that firm did not have to have a permit to operate in Nebraska.

Shotwell said he now is after "higher-ups" in the case.

Favorable Conditions Reported in Farm Belt

Washington, D. C., June 22.—Generally favorable conditions for the harvesting of grain and hay and for the cultivation of crops exist in some northeastern and north central states, were reported by the weather bureau in its weekly weather and crop report for the week ending Tuesday.

The winter wheat belt had unseasonably high temperatures, the report said, the result being that the crop ripened rapidly. The weather was too hot in Kansas and reports reached the bureau that the grain in central and northern counties was ripening prematurely and shriveling. Harvest was in progress at the close of the week northward to Maryland, central Indiana, central Missouri and in the eastern half of Kansas.

Spring wheat continued to make satisfactory progress in all sections.

Price Trend Upward Is Marked During May

Washington, June 22.—Distinct upward trend of prices, more marked in May than in any recent month, was noted last night by the Commerce department in a survey of the general business situation. In most instances, the department declared, the rise has not been great, but indicates a much firmer demand than heretofore.

Reports received up to June 20, the department stated, indicate that the business revival is getting on more substantial grounds. Favorable features noted in the general situation were the continued increase in the production of automobiles and trucks, lower interest rates, increasing demand for money, increasing employment and decline in business failures.

Chadron, Neb., June 22.—(Special Telegram.)—Fred W. Thomas of Omaha told bankers of Group 6, attending their annual convention here, that one thing burling the farming interest of most was the loss of foreign trade to the United States. C. M. Gruenther, secretary of the farm loan bank of Omaha, stated that $7,000,000 had been loaned through his organization to the farmers. The local chamber of commerce as well as the state normal school here gave the bankers a rousing reception. Omaha bankers who attended the Alliance meeting yesterday were among those present.

Benjamin Mickey of Wood Lake was elected president of the group. Other officers included J. C. Flannigan of Stuart, secretary, and J. F. Donnell of O'Neill and William Rooney of Chadron, members of the state committee. E. C. Davenport of Valentine and D. H. Griswold of Gordon also were elected committee-men.
