Would you advise me to get married and forget this story or break my heart?

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a young girl of 17. I work in an office four days and the night school four nights a week. On Friday night, if I ask my mother if I may go out, I am told I ought to stay at home one night in a week. I never go out with young men, nor do I stay out longer than 10 o'clock even on a Sunday night. If I go out with my sister I am told I need not stay as long as she stays, no matter where it may be. At times I feel so lonesome I cry myself to sleep. Other girls my age are permitted to go out and enjoy themselves at parties. If I get an invitation to a party, which is seldom, I am made to refuse the invitation because the party will last longer than 10 o'clock. I try to tell my mother that a girl my age should have a little recreation, but she will not listen. I am the youngest of four girls. Please tell me what to do. VERONICA.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 21 years of age and am engaged and am to be married soon. I love this young man very much. About two weeks ago I heard something about him that isn't pleasant, but still it would break my heart to give him up.

Blue Georgette and Gold Stitching Help Red Crepe Romain

By CORINNE LOWE.

New York.—(Special Correspondence.)—At some of the recent sports events held in the vicinity of New York, one felt regarding the skirts of many fashionable women exactly as one often does about the man who introduces the speakers. One wondered if they were even going to stop. They really got as friendly with the ground as does a plover. This, of course, pertains to the more dressy models of crepes and satins. Sports skirts may be 9 or 10 inches above the ground, particularly if they be the sports skirts of a flapper, but otherwise—no, no, no! The really short garment is as passe as a tidy. Sleeves of coats and dresses are often almost as prolonged as the skirts themselves. And these great wide voluminous affairs continue to be a mass of embroidery and trimming. Sleeves of colored embroidery are especially effective on the occasion of frocks, and some snowy home spun frocks show wide snowy fringes with peasant embroideries. The metallic touch of trimming is prevalent and extends even to wool jersey frocks of beige and caramel and gray, which are often set off with gold or silver braid. Here we indicate the metallic issue by a straight stitch of gold thread taken in the blue georgette sleeves and the yoke of this red crepe marocain frock. The semi-material pockets and the girdle are also stitched in gold.

Personals

Miss Eva Kirkpatrick has returned from Creston, Ia., where she visited relatives.

Jack Lee has returned from California, where he attended the Shrine convention.

Dr. Raymond Traynor has returned from Rochester, Minn., where he attended a medical meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Griffith and their daughter, Vivian Griffith, have returned from California.

Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Smith, their daughter, Izetta, and their son, Robert, will leave next week to go by motor to their ranch at Keystone. They will be gone about 10 days.

Robert Wylie, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Wylie, who graduated this year from the Ames Agricultural college and was also a student at Cornell, will leave this June for Cody, Wyo., where he will work on his father's ranch.

Miss Adaline Kent of Kentfield, Cal., will arrive Saturday morning to spend a few days with Miss Emily Burke. Miss Kent finished her junior year at Vassar this month, and since college closed she has been camping in the Adirondacks with a party of friends.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES THE TALE OF REDDY WOODPECKER BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER VIII. The Carpenter.

CHAPTER VIII. The Carpenter.

One day Reddy Woodpecker was tapping on a tall poplar that grew beside the brook. He had discovered a tiny opening in the bark and he wanted to see what was at the farther end of it. Suddenly a voice called out: "Well, well, well! What is it?" And a pale-faced person not unlike Buster Bunny peered out at Reddy Woodpecker. He was careful to keep

Common Sense

Which Way Are You Going? Have you ceased to make any effort to lift yourself out of the rut in which you have been for some years? Is your attitude a sort of resignation to your position, and when you think of the future isn't it a brief period, dismissed with the thought that you will not cross bridges till you come to them and the feeling that "the world owes you a living"? Remember that you cannot stand still—forward or backward you must go. Which way are you going? If backward, where five years hence? If you continue to go down the incline, it will be much harder to pull up the grade than if you start now to improve your time. Have an unbiased conference with yourself often. All men should take a personal inventory, frequently. Figure out which way you are going and put on more steam in the right direction while there is time. Do not slide backwards, knowingly. My Marriage Problems Adele Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Reason Madge Felt Sorry for Allen Drake. Bookcases line the walls, huge softly-cushioned lounging chairs are set conveniently near them, as well as drawn close to the fire. And from the rare etchings and prints on all parts of the world, there is no object which does not have some especial significance to him, some memory of the eventual existence he has led.

He turned the knob of his door softly, opened it and stepped inside. Then as I almost unconsciously shrank back, he put out a reassuring hand and drew me inside. As he turned from me to close it again I saw the figure of Allen Drake look at it you wouldn't remember who left it. "Probably not!" the carpenter admitted. "Good day, sir!" And he dodged out of sight.

Small Reddy Woodpecker was not discouraged. He knocked a fifth time. "What!" exclaimed the carpenter when he answered Reddy's tapping. "Have you gone yet?" "No!" Reddy replied. "I want to say—" "If you have anything more to tell me, write me a letter!" said the pale-faced carpenter. And he set up a sign where Reddy Woodpecker could see it: "This Is My Busy Day!" Then he peered from view.

wrapped in a heavy dressing gown of Oriental stuff and extended in a big arm chair by the fire. His slippered feet were resting on the fender, his whole body was suggestive of cold, a longing for warmth. His eyes were closed. His face was gray with exhaustion. Indeed, so deathlike did he look that I with difficulty suppressed a little cry of alarm as I grasped my father's arm. "She is here, Allen," my father said in a low voice. For a long second there was no response from the motionless figure in the chair. Then the eyelids with their long womanish lashes, lifted slowly as if by a great effort, and Allen Drake's tired eyes looked into mine. A Key to Memory. "You are very good," he said slowly, and in neither voice nor eyes was there the slightest trace of the arrogant man which had so antagonized me. "I have come to the end of my strength—and of my knowledge. Your father wishes to show one of these papers to you—and he will explain to you about the others I—I—cannot."

The contents of the papers before me. "The first pile," he said, "contains the exact copies of the sheets Smith had, the second his decoded interpretation, with the symbols which have battled him left in, the third the complete array of decoded symbols."

I looked at the array of papers, and at the sight of the third one my pulses leaped. For if I was not mistaken, somewhere in my memory lay the key which would unlock their meaning.
