

German Royalists Celebrate Death of Dr. Rathenau

Former Officers Lead Parade of Potsdam Streets in Demonstration for Return of Monarchy.

Berlin, June 26.—The monarchists showed their teeth yesterday. Not for one moment has the large "kaiser trust" group throughout the republic been silent or cowed. In Bavaria hardly a word of sympathy for the death of Dr. Walter Rathenau, outside of the prefectural official consideration, is spoken, while the secret monarchist societies who are charged with causing the death of Matthias Erzberger and Dr. Rathenau and the attempt on the life of Philip Scheidemann, joyfully celebrated their great success.

In Potsdam Saturday night Pan-American youths, led by former officers and singing military songs, paraded through the streets. In the village of Cuthon-Rhine, facing the bank once occupied by American forces, 25,000 demonstrated for the return of a monarchy, and against the entente occupation of Germany. In the evening itself the members of the nationalist party jeered the socialist speakers and declared against martial law as a curtailment of personal liberty.

Germany's monarchist movement consists of three elements. 1. The nationalist party. 2. Numerous secret murder organizations, chiefly in Bavaria. 3. Numerous secret murder organizations, chiefly in Bavaria.

The nationalist party openly favors the restoration of a monarchy as the first point on the program. Herr Helfferich, who Saturday received a bouquet on which were ribbons inscribed, "To the Savior of German Honor, From South American Friends," is the leader of the people's party, backed by Hugo Stinnes and a big business party with numerous monarchists.

The second group is the hardest worker for monarchy. It includes General Ludendorff, other generals, numerous guards, other regimental organizations, nationalist war veterans society, and remnants of the Bavarian or Gesch.

The third group consists of a so-called volunteer corps, led by Heers Kossbach, Ehrhart, Weser, Heidebrecht and numerous jobless war veterans ready to do anything for pay. Members of this group helped Kapp capture Berlin, fought workers in the Ruhr, murdered Erzberger, and sent troops to fight the Poles in upper Silesia. They are strong in Silesia, Mecklenburg and Bavaria. They are financed by Bavarian peasantry. Like the Ku Klux Klan, they have a secret ritual, take an oath in blood, and swear in a committee for assassinations. One of these secret murder organizations was named in the Erzberger trial.

Name of Candidate May Not Appear on Ballot

Neigh, Neb., June 26.—(Special.)—According to legal opinion in this city, the name of W. W. Cole cannot appear on the ballots of Antelope county as republican candidate at the primary election for representative of the 21st district.

Mr. Cole filed his name among the first candidates of the county for representative of the Eighteenth district, and all filings have officially been given the county press from the office of the county treasurer.

Antelope county comprised the Eighteenth representative district until changed at the last legislature, of which Mr. Cole was a member, to the Sixty-second district. Since the filings have been closed for more than a week, it is a matter of conjecture as to what will be done with reference to placing this name on the ballots when such district does not exist in Antelope county.

Bryan in Favor of Tax Cut and Code Bill Repeal

Democratic Aspirant for Governor Also Declares for Repeal of Indeterminate Sentence Law.

Lincoln, June 26.—(Special.)—Lowering of taxes and repeal of the code bill are the leading features in the legislative and administrative program on which Charles W. Bryan, former mayor, announces in a public statement he will make the race for the democratic nomination for governor.

"In submitting my name as a democratic candidate for governor at the primary election, I do so with the assurance of many that my candidacy will prevent the injection of the liquor question into the state campaign and encourage a militant democracy to concentrate its efforts upon tax reduction and business efficiency in state management," reads the statement.

"I believe taxes should be and can be reduced.

"I believe the way to reduce taxes is to reduce the cost of government, and to be more specific.

Would Repeal Code Bill.

"I believe the code bill should be repealed.

"I believe the duplication of administrative heads, as now in force, has greatly added to the number of employees on the payroll, lowering efficiency of the service of the state government, and is an imposition upon the taxpayers.

"I favor placing the administrative and departmental work of the state back into the hands of the regularly elected state officials.

"I believe in a regrouping of the various departments in the hands of the proper state officials where said state officials can be held directly responsible to the voters who elect them, and that the great army of useless employees now on the payroll should be discharged as a matter of economy.

"I am in favor of abolishing jockeying at the people's expense by the numerous state officers and employees on mileage books paid for by the taxpayers.

Favors Auto License Cut.

"I favor reduction of the automobile license tax in proportion to the reduction in income of farmers and wage earners of the state.

"In considering appropriations for all state work and all state institutions, careful consideration should be given to the people's financial condition.

"I favor the provisions of the Sheppard-Towner maternal bill.

"I am a supporter of the primary system, and favor doing away with the party circle, and am opposed to the four bills becoming a law that are to be voted upon under the referendum.

"I am in favor of the repeal of, or an amendment to the indeterminate sentence law and in favor of the modification of the rules governing the pardon board that permit and encourage weak officials to release from the penitentiary confirmed criminals without proper punishment."

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Foolish Pride.

Dear Miss Fairfax: What do you think of this? Vi and B love each other; they both work and make the same salaries. B will not marry Vi until he makes twice as much as she makes now—but there is no prospect of his doing this for some years. Vi is willing to marry and keep her position, but B won't have this. Wants her to wait until she can remain at home. Don't you think if B really loved her he would adopt her plan? She is thinking of giving him up. What is your opinion?

"WONDERING."

B is making the blunder of putting his masculine pride before all else. If he can persuade her to a real partnership—which is the right marriage truly is, their love will be finer and bigger. A woman cannot help working proudly and happily side by side with her husband—provided he realizes that they are both struggling, ambitious individuals and that he can give his wife more by offering devotion and understanding than by hanging her with jewels. Luxury and ease are not what a fine woman craves—but unless Vi can make her sweetheart see this they will never be peaceful and happy together.

Barring Her Friends.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been going out with a wonderful boy for the past three months, and last week he asked me to give up my other friends and go out only with him. Do you think this is playing fair when he has not given me a ring or plainly said he will marry me? I love him dearly and would sacrifice everything were he to treat me the way I should be treated. He has absolutely no bad habits. I'm not inclined to recommend cutting yourself off from all other men for the sake of one man to whom you are not engaged. We all need our friends. As for your not being engaged, do you blame a man for wanting to know a girl thoroughly before desiring to study the question carefully before plunging into matrimony? If there were a little less speed about leaping into marriage a great deal of unhappiness could be avoided. A life partnership ought to be based on certainty and security and knowledge. Don't try to rush things just because you have a romantic desire to be engaged or married.

The Admiring Admission That Came From Allen Drake.

For a swift resentful second after Allen Drake's query I felt like picking up the papers on which were the courteous characters—or, rather, portions of them—which I had recognized, and flinging them at his head with a passionate refusal to do anything more concerning the matter. Then, as I noticed the expression of his tired eyes, I realized that the emphasis which had offended me was unintentional.

"Will you tell me," he had asked, "how in the name of all that's wonderful, you are able to recognize them?"

But though the words and emphasis were stirring, I saved in his face and eyes that he had no thought of belittling me. There was a very natural astonishment, of course, but besides that, I saw distinct admiration and something more, a swift, reviving hope which, it was plain, depended upon me alone.

"I believe something unusually pathetic, appealing in the aspect of this man whom I had never seen in any other guise than that of a brilliant, rather lordly man-of-the-world. He was now, I told myself, with a whimsical recollection of my teaching days, very much like a child who fails in his final examinations, and then sees a faint hope of the catastrophe being averted. And there was no mistaking the need in the eyes looking into mine.

Always, I had regarded Allen Drake as being so wrapped up in his own self-esteem that most human contracts bored him. But all at once I saw that beneath his blase, indolent mask, he was like most other men, craving the aid, the sympathy of a woman near to him in friendship or affection when a crisis came.

A Little Explanation.

I believe if men would tell the truth, the hardest of them never get over the instinctive longing figuratively to "run to mother," when they are hurt. And I am very certain that the surest way to secure a woman's interest is to arouse her maternal instinct. At any rate, when I saw that appealing look in Allen Drake's eyes, I reflected that according to my father's statement there was no woman alive of my blood, none to whom he was linked by any ties of affection. And I felt a thrill of pity for his loneliness, a sudden fierce desire to aid him, which surprised my usually placid pulses.

My father saved me the necessity of explanation.

"In her girlhood," he said, "my daughter took a great interest in the study of these early inscriptions, and she had the advantage of being associated for a time with a man who was a master in that line, Prof. Severance."

"Severance!" Allen Drake interrupted, and I was feminine enough to enjoy the somewhat awed look he gave me. "Why he was one of the big sharks in the sea!"

Madge Is Embarrassed.

"Exactly so," my father returned, "and he gave Margaret much valuable aid, as well as bequeathing her some of his notebooks and a part of his technical library."

"Then," Mr. Drake turned to me, eagerly, and before my eyes he was a man transformed, his fatigue miraculously vanished, his eyes gleaming, the grayish pallor of his face changing to a healthy flush, "you will be able to straighten this out."

His words were an assertion rather than a question, and he laid his hand confidently upon the pile of papers holding the marks which had eluded him.

"That I cannot tell yet," I said cautiously. "If what I conjecture be true, and they have used half of these characters, the code is a very arbitrary one. There will be great difficulties. I shall want these to compare with my notebooks, and you say these undeciphered characters probably apply only to name and figures, probably dates?"

"That is the inference I draw from the words I did decipher," he answered, still looking at me in a curious respectful fashion, which much embarrassed me.

"Could you, from your knowledge of things in general," I spoke with significance, "provide me with three

The correct answer to Mr. Edison's question:

"What is Grape-Nuts made of?"

Answered by the makers of Grape-Nuts

THIS is one of a number of questions which Mr. Edison is putting to applicants for an important position in his organization. We are happy to learn the interest shown in the food, Grape-Nuts, by a man of such broad attainments as Mr. Edison.

There has never been any secret about what Grape-Nuts is made of. It has been on the market for 24 years, and practically everybody knows its composition.

But inasmuch as such a simple, everyday question as "When did Columbus discover America?" is often incorrectly answered, it may be well to take this opportunity to restate the following facts about Grape-Nuts:

Grape-Nuts is a highly nourishing cereal food, made from a mixture of whole wheat flour, malted barley, salt and water. The mixture is raised by yeast, baked in loaves, then sliced, further baked, and then crushed into granules.

No food in the world is so thoroughly baked as Grape-Nuts. More than 20 hours are consumed in the various baking processes.

As every diet expert knows, this long baking brings about conversion of the carbohydrate elements, developing dextrin, maltose and dextrose or grape-sugar—a form of sugar to which all starch elements must be changed before they can be assimilated by the system.

Grape-Nuts when eaten does not form a pasty mass difficult to digest—the 20-hours baking makes this delicious food easily digested by even those with the most delicate stomachs; and the character of the food requires thorough mastication.

Grape-Nuts is a well-balanced food for building bone, tooth and nerve structure. When combined with cream or milk, it is admittedly a complete food.

You will find Grape-Nuts everywhere. At your grocer's, your club, your hotel, your restaurant.

In America, where you don't find Grape-Nuts you won't find people.
