

T. W. McCullough Talks on Forest Work in Nebraska

Continental Club Hears Bee Man on Possibilities of Growing Pine in Sandhill Region.

At the regular noonday meeting of the Continental club in Brandeis restaurant yesterday, T. W. McCullough of The Omaha Bee gave an interesting half-hour talk on the possibilities of the sandhill region of Nebraska in the development of a great forest of yellow and jack pine. He referred to the Bessey division of the Nebraska national forest, located on the Middle Loup river, 2 1/2 miles west of the village of Halsey. "Interest in the afforestation of Nebraska is growing," said Mr. McCullough, who was introduced by R. M. Switzer, president of the club. "This state owns more than 600,000 acres of land in the northwestern counties. It has been demonstrated that each acre will yield an increment of 1,200 feet of pine lumber a year. This demonstration has been made on a tract of more than 8,000 acres already cultivated. It would take many years to get the vast tract in full growth with pine trees, but it can be done and then the lumber problem in Nebraska will have been solved." The speaker stated that a visit to Cherry and Brown counties would surprise Nebraskans who have not kept posted in the work being done to increase the timber supply of this state.
