Sail for Europe

Representatives from all countries will be sent to this meeting, the object of which is to bring about a closer relationship in public school education. The use of the club house where the meetings are to be held was donated by an American woman, Mrs. Whelan Road, for a term of three years to a group of American university women. During the summer months the rooms will be at the disposal of transient university women from the United States.

Other Omaha teachers who plan to attend the convention are the Misses Bess Shackell, Eunice Stebbins, Helen Clark and Clara Sievers. Following the conference, Miss Bozell will remain in Paris for six months, where she will resume her study of French.

Music Outstanding Feature of Biennial

The General Federation of Women's clubs contributed $102,000 toward the recently purchased national club house in Washington, D. C., at the biennial meeting of the federation in Chautauqua, N. Y., last week. Nebraska's share of this amount was $1,500, according to Mrs. Philip Potter, first vice president of the Omaha Woman's club. The money was raised in one-half hour.

Twenty-five delegates attended the Nebraska banquet which was held June 28. The delegation presented Mrs. Edgar Penney, state president, with a gold General Federation pin. Mrs. Charles Johannes, president of the Omaha Woman's club, who was unable to attend the biennial, was presented with the national pin by Mesdames Philip Potter, Edgar Allen and Charles Hempel at a meeting of the executive board Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Potter. Reports of the national meeting were given at this time.

Music was one of the outstanding features of the convention in the opinion of Mrs. Potter. Programs of American music were given daily from 5 until 6 p. m., under direction of Mrs. Marx Obendorfer, national chairman of music. The playing of Alberto Salvi, noted harpist, will long be remembered, according to Mrs. Potter and Mrs. Allen.

Problems That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Mother and Flance. Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a widow of 28, with a boy of 4. I love a man of 30, at whose home I now live, caring for his invalid mother. We planned to marry, but the home belongs to a brother who will not work and who lets my fiance pay rent, bills etc. My fiance is stuck on account when we marry the mother is to go with us. Three other brothers do not contribute anything to the support of their mother.

Do you think this fair when we are trying to save toward our future home? BILLIE.

Don't pick flaws in the attitude of the other sons. See to it that the man you love does the considerable thing where his other brothers are concerned. Suppose it does take you a few months longer—or even a year—to save for the future you two plan, won't you feel happier and more blessed if you have not climbed to your happiness over the wounded feelings of an old woman? If there are constant discussions concerning who ought to do what—don't for a moment suppose that your fiance's mother won't feel that she is a bone of contention—a nuisance and a burden? Surely you don't want to make her unhappy.

Can She Reform Him? Dear Miss Fairfax: Am I, about six months ago I was introduced to a man of 23. I think a lot of him and am sure he thinks a lot of me. The last time I was out with him he said it would be best for our friendship to cease, as I was too good a girl to go around with him. He said he had several reasons. One was on account of drinking, which he tried to but could not give up.

If you think you can be a good influence in this boy's life, then perhaps you would do well to give him your friendship. But don't idealize a man who doubts himself. There is an old saying, "He who doubts himself will achieve only such results as to justify it." Unless you are a piece of common sense and self-control, it may be best to accept his verdict without too much effort to win him over to ideals which he doesn't care to struggle to obtain.

My Marriage Problems

The Way Mother Graham Awakened Madge for a Busy Day. "Margaret! Do you know what time it is?"

My mother-in-law's voice spoke impatiently outside my door, and I gave a little mental groan as I struggled to wakefulness from a most refreshing slumber and held my wrist watch up to my eyes.

"Yes. It's only half after six." I stressed the adverb, though I might as well have saved my breath, for Mother Graham repeated the emphasis with another inflection and meaning.

"Only!" she exclaimed scornfully. "Have you forgotten that you are to drive me to Easthampton this morning, that Junior is to be dressed, and that we have to get breakfast?"

There were many things I could have told her, among them, that our breakfast hour was at 8, and that it would not take an hour and a half to dress myself and my child for a drive to a neighboring village. But I reminded myself with a little sigh that there was no use answering my mother-in-law in any fashion other than absolute agreement, especially when she had a shopping expedition on hand, so my response was a doleful:

"I'll get up at once."

An Irresistible Demand. "See that you do," she retorted, and I heard the sound of her retreating footsteps as I put my own toes out of bed with a reluctant little shiver at the crisp morning air, and a sylvan wish for another nap.

I took my inevitable look at Junior in his crib close to my bed to see that he was all right, and found him just stretching into wakefulness. As I bent over him in admiration until he opened his eyes, he smiled up at me and demanded:

"Dooner tum in oor bed?"

I knew that I was risking the vials of wrath, but this appeal was one not to be denied. So I swung him high from his crib, crept back with him into my own bed, and for a rapturous few minutes cuddled him to his heart's content—and mine. Then I played, "This little pig goes to market" with his pink toes, tossed the "spratcake high in the air," recited for the thousandth time more or less—his favorite tale of the wolf who "puffed and luffed and blew the little pig's house in," and sang—

But every mother worthy the name knows by heart my repertoire.

Madge Is Apprehensive. "Margaret! What are you doing?" My mother-in-law's voice outside the

Prayer Each Day

Prayer is the faithfulness—Lam. 1:22

May we never forget to be thankful to Thee, our Father. Thou dost daily load us with benefits. Thou art continually planning for our welfare; yet we are indifferent to Thy great goodness. We pray, and our prayers are answered, but we forget often to say, "Thank you."

Make us more mindful of Thee, or our dependence upon Thee, and of Thy readiness to supply all our needs. Then may we do more than speak our praise; may we live our praise, and show our love to Thee by our acts.

Be present with us in our home. Teach us to trust Thee, to listen to Thy Word, to do Thy will. Teach us the joy of serving Thee. When doubt disturbs us, may we have a vision of Thee that will take away all distress. Forbid it that we should darken the days of others by doubting words.

Forgive our sins and make us more earnest in prayers, in gifts, in service. Let our home be a center from which blessings go out to neighbors near and far. And show us how to live always to the praise of Thy Holy Name. Amen
