

Air Mail Stations to Be Equipped for Radio Service

Present Telegraph System to Be Supplemented with Wireless Telephone for Broadcasting.

Washington, July 7.—(Special Telegram.)—Plans are being considered by the Postoffice department for changing at least a few of the 15 radio stations operated in connection with the air mail service, including Omaha, to provide both radio telegraph and radio telephone service. The stations are at Washington, D. C.; Hazledust, Pa.; Bellefont, Pa.; Cleveland, O.; Bryan, O.; Chicago, Iowa City, Omaha, North Platte, Cheyenne, Rock Springs, Wyo.; Salt Lake City, Reno and San Francisco. The Washington station has both radio telegraph and radio telephone service for nine months, besides maintaining an hour-to-hour record of the progress of air mail. The Postoffice department radio stations now send out other information. Complete weather reports also go out daily, as well as reports of grain, dairy, and livestock prices. It is still uncertain just when the stations will be changed to radio telephone apparatus. Because of the first call on the radio by the air mail equipment will probably be gradual. Further announcements concerning the new service are expected within short time.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES MORE TALES OF CUFFY BEAR BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER I What the Wind Told Cuffy Bear

That afternoon the wind shifted, wafting a sweet, sweet scent through the woods and driving Cuffy Bear almost frantic. He knew that Farmer Green was boiling maple sap down in the sugar-house at the foot of Blue Mountain. Cuffy wrinkled his nose and licked his lips. And he said to his sister Silkie, "Doesn't that smell good?"

Silkie Bear agreed with her brother. She had learned the taste of Farmer Green's sugar. Like Cuffy, she longed to enjoy it again. She couldn't see, herself, how they were going to get any of the sugar. But she made up her mind to keep close to Cuffy. Somehow he had a way of getting what he wanted. "Don't go near the sugar-house again this morning," Bear had said to them. "Don't go near the sugar-house again this morning." But that didn't bother Cuffy.

"Come on!" he cried to Silkie. Then he went galloping home, where he was almost too busy to answer a question. But that didn't bother Cuffy either. He didn't ask his mother any questions. He simply said to her, "We're going sliding." The good lady hardly heard him. Without turning her head she replied, "Very well!" "Come on!" Cuffy whispered to his sister, Silkie. "It's all right. She says we may." So they tiptoed out of the den. And soon Cuffy slid down a steep snow-covered bank, with Silkie following right behind him. He didn't wait to watch her land at the foot of the bank in a flurry of snow, but scrambled to his feet and scampered down the mountain-side, shooting the chutes wherever a chance offered. Little roly-poly Silkie found it hard to keep pace with Cuffy. Now and then she lost sight of him. But his tracks were plain. And anyhow, her nose alone would have told her where he went. Didn't it keep tell-quereast thing she had ever known. "We mustn't go near the sugar-house," Cuffy reminded her. "No, indeed!" she exclaimed. "Mother said not to." "But she didn't say not to go around it," said Cuffy. "I'm sure that what she meant was that we shouldn't go sniffing about the door." To that Silkie Bear nodded her sleek head.

Then they stole silently through the fringe of forest that formed the edge of the clearing. They moved very slowly, stopping often to gaze with longing eyes at the squat building in the middle of the open space. Out of its great stone chimney poured the white smoke of burning logs. Out of its wide doorway floated now and then a wisp of sweetish steam. Somewhere off in the woods rang the voice of Farmer Green's hired man, shouting "Gee!" and "Haw!" to the mighty oxen, Bright and Broad, as they walloped through the drits to gather the sap from brimming buckets.

That voice frightened little Silkie Bear. "Don't you think," she whimpered, "that we'd better go home?" But Cuffy didn't answer her. He had stopped short and was sniffing the air. "Woof!" he cried. "There's maple sugar right near us!" Ten seconds later he had found it. (Copyright, 1922.)

Little roly-poly Silkie found it hard to keep pace with Cuffy. Now and then she lost sight of him. But his tracks were plain. And anyhow, her nose alone would have told her where he went. Didn't it keep tell-

At last she overtook Cuffy in a tangled thicket, peeping at something in a clearing beyond. "What is it?" she asked him. "It's a sugar-house," he murmured. "Isn't it strange that we've slid straight towards it?" She pretended that it was the
