Jimmy Rabbit gave his ears and his nose a twist as he said, "There isn't much to tell. You take a little tasket and fill it with good things and hang it on somebody's door. Then you ring the bell—if there is a bell. If there isn't, you knock."

"Yes! And what next?"
"You run away. And when the people come to the door they have a surprise."
Cuffy Bear thought deeply for a few moments. Something puzzled him.

"When do you take the good things out of the basket?" he asked at last.

Now, although Cuffy had just eaten à good dinner, he still felt hun-gry. Reaching into one of his baskets he pulled out a mouse and ate it. "That won't be missed," he muttered. Then he took a frog from another basket, and an acorn from the third. The baskets are really too full," he "The baskets are really too full," he mumbled as he crunched the goodies.
'Having begun to eat, Cuffy couldn't stop. In a little while he had left nothing but a frog in one basket, a mouse in another and an acorn in the third. And so he hung them outside the doors of his friends.

When they found the baskets they certainly were surprised.

Reaching home again at last, Cuffy found that somebody had left a May basket for him. He was delighted. But when he looked inside it he gave
