Opposition Grew Expression of Views by Lady Astor Who States Results in United States

London, July 30.—(By A. P.)—Plymouth is proud of her American-born member of parliament, but American-born ideas about liquor are likely to result in opposition to Lady Astor when the next contest in a parliamentary election for the southern division of Plymouth takes place.

Since her return from her recent American tour, Lady Astor has announced that she favored local option, with the result that from the southwest comes the news that a large section of the conservative party is strongly of the opinion that conservatism should not be allied in any form with prohibition.

Prepare for Fight. England is gradually lining up for and against liquor in a fight which is everywhere considered inevitable in the next decade.

"Woman's refining influence is nowhere so actually felt as behind the saloon bar," says Mrs. Gladys Marshall, recently speaking to a group of women members of the organization who have taken up the fight to keep the aged institution of the rosy-cheeked English barmaid from going into the discard.

Marriage of Barry Wicklow

By RUBY M. AYRES Copyright, 1922.

(Continued from yesterday.) He did not dare to look at Hazel. He did not dare to think what this would mean. And Norman went on recklessly. "Barry's in debt. He's always in debt—I told you about him before."

He rose to his feet and walked over to the window, standing there looking out at the night. "He heard Norman go on. 'It was just about the time that I told the governor about you. He was mad with me.'"

There was a tragic silence. Barry was still staring out of the window. He wondered what had happened to the world all at once. He could almost hear the agitated beating of his heart as he waited in an agony for a hand to speak to someone to speak for anyone to break the nightmare spell that seemed to be holding him bound hand and foot.

CHAPTER XVI. There was a moment of profound silence, then Hazel said: "Oh, Barry!"

There was a world of unutterable anguish and reproach in her voice. She waved him back when he would have gone to her. "But you don't deny it. You say it's true," he answered, wildly, suddenly she broke down and began to sob broken-heartedly.

CHAPTER XVII. There was a moment of profound silence, then Hazel said: "Oh, Barry!"

It seemed such a lonely, desolate something. Presently it stopped. He heard the little movement of a chair being pushed back, and he held his breath.

She was coming over to him? Was she going to forgive him and tell him it was all right? His heart beat nearly broken-heartedly. Norman rose from his chair. He would have laid his hand on Hazel's shoulder, but the look of fury in his cousin's face checked him at the moment.

"Hazel," said Barry, beseechingly. He crossed the room and tried to put his arms around her. "Let me explain—let me tell you how it all happened. Give me a chance to explain."

He hated me. If there is some truth to what he says, and I'm not going to deny it, it's not all true. I care a thundering sight more for you than he ever did. If he had had one job of affection for you do you think he'd have come here this afternoon and told me that he'd married your girl? She answered him steadily. "I am glad he came. I am glad that you carried the truth. And as for you carrying for me—" her lips quivered.

"I'm afraid I can't see at all where this comes in." She moved towards the door. "Barry rushed after her. 'Where are you going?' Hazel—you've got to forgive me. You can't have forgotten that you're my wife!"

"I swear to you, Hazel, I've never cared for any woman but you, and I married you because I loved you, and for no other reason. If I did listen to what Norman's father said, it's all forgotten long ago. I forgot it from the moment when I found you were mine. I met at the theater. I've never cared for any woman as much as I care for you."

Norman looked at the scattered broken glass at her feet and then up at his agitated face. "You lied to me about her—unless Norman has lied. Where was she ever engaged to her?" she asked, quivering.

"Yes, I was. At least—I asked her to marry me, and she never would say one way or the other. It's true that she threw me over—or, at least, that she pretended to. I got mad. I was rotten to feel that I'd been chucked by a woman. That decided me to go to Bedmund. I went off in a rage—I was boiling with rage—"

CHAPTER XVIII. There was a moment of profound silence, then Hazel said: "Oh, Barry!"

There was a world of unutterable anguish and reproach in her voice. She waved him back when he would have gone to her. "But you don't deny it. You say it's true," he answered, wildly, suddenly she broke down and began to sob broken-heartedly.

Wesleyan Adds Religion Courses

Advanced Studies in Rural Church Methods and Administration Provided.

Chancellor I. B. Schreckengast is issuing a booklet on Nebraska Wesleyan this summer. Copies may be obtained by addressing the Nebraska Wesleyan department of publicity. The publication includes notes upon many lines of life service. An explanation is given of the opportunities for development for the ministerial student at Wesleyan. The department of religion, which is headed by the chancellor, has a staff of seven faculty members.

The department of religion and rural extension at Nebraska Wesleyan has outlined an extensive program for the coming scholastic year. Prof. W. L. Ruyfe, head of the department, plans to take the work practically with field observations and reports. A course in rural church clinic has been arranged especially for students in active pastorates, with a view to the solving of problems incident to rural pastorates. Surveys will be conducted and made to disclose conditions and peculiarities of each field.

An advance course is provided in which an attempt is made to combine theory of rural church methods with practice. This includes organization and administration of rural churches. The course will be assigned by the instructor to be worked out in the field by the student.

Prof. Ruyfe has also provided a course in rural church administration in which the relation of the church to community life will receive attention. A course in the relationships of the town and the farm community will cover such questions as the "Basis for existence of the town" and the "Co-ordination of town and farm community interests."

Advanced students in this line of work will receive special attention in detailed surveys of Nebraska communities. A number of other courses have been outlined to include religious education in relation to farm and small-town life.

Personal Instruction Brings Good Results

"The people of Omaha and vicinity have been quick to recognize and avail themselves of the benefits of personal instruction as given by the American College of Business, 1912 Farnam street," says Prof. Youngstrom. A couple of years ago, when Prof. Youngstrom took charge of the college, it was located in a couple of rooms in the Beard building.

Shortly after he took charge the school was moved to the second floor of the I. O. O. F. building and this spring the college was moved to its present site, where it again occupies larger space and is fully equipped with college bank and college practice office.

Prof. Youngstrom says "that the good results secured by individual instruction has enabled the school to impress the business men with the quality of our product and as a consequence every graduate from this college is in a position. In view of these results I am satisfied that individual instruction is unsurpassed for business college methods, and therefore we shall continue it."

Success in Business Hinges on Thinking

A person cannot go far in business unless he is able to think and to think straight, according to H. B. Boyles, founder and executive head of Boyles college, who states that during all his 25 years of experience in the commercial teaching business, he has yet to see a person with the ability to think who hasn't made good in the business world.

One of the foremost features of the Boyles system of commercial teaching is cultivating the thinking faculty and directing them in business channels. Actual business practices are used to make the work interesting and practical, and when the graduate steps into a beginning position he or she feels right at home.
