SLEEPY-TIME TALES

MORE TALES OF CUFFY BEAR

BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER XL
Cuffy Fights His Father.
"I wish we knew some other game," Cuffy Bear said to his sister, Silkie. They had been climbing trees, splashing in the brook, and sliding down a steep, grassy bank. Now, tired of these sports, they were wandering aimlessly down the mountain.

"Can't you think of something new?" Silkie asked him.
"No, I can't," Cuffy replied. But he was so intent upon his business that he didn't know it. Lowering his head to the ground he gave a push with his hind legs.

"You're afraid," she told him bluntly.
"I am not," he bawled. Turning about, he drew back a paw to cuff her. And at that moment, with his back to the steep slope, he slipped on a round stone. He clutched at Silkie—and missed her. The next moment he was turning somersault—backward—down the mountain-side.

Now, Mr. Bear himself was hunting a mouse at the very spot where the great landslide had stopped. He was so intent upon his business that he knew little else. Suddenly something struck him a blow from behind that all but knocked him off his feet.

Little did Mr. Bear guess that by standing where he had saved his son some broken bones; for Mr. Bear was a soft object to hit. He was big and fat and wore a shaggy coat.

He never paused to see what had struck him, but leaped like a deer over a fallen tree and vanished in the forest.

Later, Mr. Bear told his family how a mountain lion had leaped upon his back and how he had shaken off the creature, which had run away before he could attack it. When they heard this story Cuffy and Silkie flashed a glance at each other.

"Did you say you ran away, Pa?" Cuffy inquired.
For an answer Mr. Bear gave him a smart cuff over the head.

"This cub," said Mr. Bear to his wife, "is growing more impatient every day. I run away from a mountain lion? Certainly I didn't!"
Both Cuffy and Silkie knew how truthfully their father spoke.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD
Woman Relied Upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Emporia, Kansas.—"I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines years ago when I was a girl. For several years I had severe menstrual periods, making me very weak and interfering with my regular duties. I tried several remedies without obtaining relief. I was induced to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by friends and it restored me to normal health. I often have occasion and do recommend your Vegetable Compound to my friends who have troubles similar to my own. You may use these facts as a testimonial."
—EVA ADDRESS, 218 Union St., Emporia, Kansas.

There are many women who first used our Vegetable Compound during their girlhood days. They found it a valuable help during trying periods. In later years they use it whenever they feel those annoying symptoms which women often have.

It is prepared carefully from medicinal plants, whose properties are especially adapted to correct the troubles which have.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Report Tom Chester Made at the Conference.
"If I were you, Chief, I wouldn't stand for my lady, even a perfect one, calling me no names like Gamaliel!"

Allen Drake's drawing voice trailed across the silence which followed Lillian's assembling of our little group, and I, for one, was distinctly grateful to him for the bantering speech, despite my annoyance at the contemptuous of a minute before. Whether intentionally or not, he had diverted every one's attention from me to my father, who smiled indulgently at him.

"When you're as old as I am, Allen," my father replied, "you'll have learned to kiss the red any charming woman wilds for your training. But, indeed, in this case I am highly flattered. I accept the name!—but I must play a silent role tonight. Mr. Underwood, this affair of the man Smith and of Joe in the hospital has been in your hands from the first. It is to you we must look for the report upon their actions, and the plan for dealing with them."

It was characteristic of Lillian that she made no demur, but struck directly into the heart of the matter that had called us together, with only an airy, mocking gesture of acknowledgment in my father's direction.
"The only report I have," she said, "is from Dr. Pettit. He says that Joe is able to leave the hospital, and that people purporting to be his employers are waiting to take him away, and will take Mrs. Bickett as nurse, but that he will delay his consent until we give the word. That, of course, we do not wish to do until we have dealt with Smith here and found out what his future course is likely to be. Dr. Pettit is going to tell Smith tomorrow that his ankle is well enough for him to walk. And then I think we may get ready for refections. That was the extent of my information up to Mr. Chester's arrival. He had just begun an interesting report when I was called away. So begin at the beginning again," she smiled encouragingly at Tom Chester, "and tell us what you have found out concerning Smith."

"It isn't Cricket."
"It isn't much," Mr. Chester began modestly, "only we've been keeping a line on his mail. All of it up to a few days ago has been postmarked from the city, but for the last week he has been getting letters postmarked Quogue. We did a little judicious snooping around there, and found out by pure luck that a couple of foreign looking birds with an expensive and powerful limousine had been dropping into the postoffice every day to mail letters. They didn't belong around there, and finally somebody spotted them as coming from Riverhead—said they had been staying up there for a week or two. We got a chance to lamp one of the envelopes, and, sure enough, it was to Anton, as Smith calls himself here."

"Strikes me you are slurring some of the details, young man," Lillian interrupted with mock severity. "How did you manage to get a slant at the letter?"

There was distinct admiration in her voice, and young Mr. Chester colored warmly under it. The next instant, however, the flush receded, leaving him pale, but with cold, angry eyes as Allen Drake's suave voice drawled languidly:
"Don't ask the good youth to betray his second-story methods, dear lady. It isn't cricket."

A Caustic Retort.
A slangy couplet I had heard from Dicky's lips on more than one occasion flashed into my mind.
"It isn't what he sez, but the nastiness way he sez it, and I sternly put down an impulse to cry out to Mr. Drake that his own action was distinctly not "cricket."

Tom Chester did not need me as a champion, however. At Drake's interruption Lillian opened her fine eyes wide and looked at him steadily, though with apparent smiling mockery for a second or two that seemed endless.

"Don't get jealous, dearie, because you didn't have a chance at the snooping around," she advised carelessly. "Go on, son."

Her eyes flickered to my face, then back to that of the brilliant secret service agent, and for a panic-stricken second I wondered if there was a hidden meaning in her words. Mr. Drake's face was unmoved, but his unusual long womanish lashes suddenly veiled his eyes. It was a movement I had seen before, and I wondered now as then if he had not done it to conceal his resentment at Lillian's gibe. When the lashes lifted again, however, his keen eyes were as inscrutable as ever.

"I can't help being madly jealous," he drawled, "but don't let my private feelings interfere with so dramatic a recital."

There was a sneering disparagement of the younger man's work in his tone, which he did not try to veil, and I saw honest impetuous Tom Chester unconsciously catch his upper lip in his teeth. He would never have the poise, or the brilliance of the older man, but as a man he was worth 10 times Allen Drake, I said to myself hotly, forgetting for a minute in my sudden partisanship the importance of the story Tom Chester was relating.

Problems That Perplex
Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Mother Unfair.
Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been keeping company with a young man for two years with the understanding that I will be married shortly. Now, this young man has asked his mother for her consent and she strongly objects. Her reason is that he is the main support of the family, but he has a sister working also. Now, I am willing to work after I am married and live with his mother to keep up the little home, but she strongly objects to this also. Kindly advise me as to what I shall do, as we love each other dearly and find it very hard to part.
A BROKEN HEART.

The man's mother is being most unkind. You have made an honest offer to do your share toward making marriage practical and no cause of hardship or suffering to her. When you offer to go on working you are doing the same thing—unless the mother sees things more generously and tolerantly you'll have a hard time uniting the families under one roof. But it would be a great injustice for you to not give each other up because a selfish woman is afraid her son's happiness is going to cost her something.

Country Club.
Among those who entertained at the dinner dance last evening at the Country club were Gen. F. J. Kernan of Fort Crook, who had 14 guests; L. P. Crofoot, 10; Dr. C. A. Roeder, 8; and Mrs. Luther Drake, 6.

Church Picnic.
The 16th annual picnic of the Luther League of Kountze Memorial church will be held Thursday evening, August 17, at Riverview park. Miss Florence Anderson and Theron Jensen are in charge of the affair.

Luncheon for Daughter.
Mrs. H. A. Messmore was hostess Tuesday at her home in honor of her daughter, Mrs. T. O. Hester, of Exira, Ia., who is her guest. Those present were the Mesdames E. C. Larmon, Paul Velleman, A. W. Francis, C. O. Hester, Fred Guggenmos, S. A. Bixby and Miss Grace Irene Hester.

Social Barriers.
Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 20 and in love with a man of 24 who is madly in love with me. But my parents say he is inferior to me in every respect—education, appearance, and social and financial standing. That is partly true, but I know that I can influence him to do bigger and better things in life. My parents would never give their consent to my marrying him. They say I am very young and will forget him. What shall I do?
Social and educational barriers seem nothing to young love. But when man and wife don't enjoy the same things, have no interests in common, and practically do not "speak the same language," what

Parents' Problems

What can be done in the case of a little girl of 10, who likes to speak of what she sees and hears, to keep her frank, and yet prevent her from developing into a gossip?
A lively child of any age is very apt to see and hear everything she can; and if she is fond of talking, she will tell all she hears and sees. But she can be taught never to repeat anything unpleasant about people, and never to use names that she may chance to hear. Parents and other people are too often at fault by setting a bad example in these respects.

Of the 287,000 women who became brides in England last year nearly 250 were more than 70 years of age.
