

A MODERN MILK FACTORY. Maryland's champion dairy cow, a prize Holstein of the U. S. Department of Agriculture's herd at Beltsville. She produced more than 25,000 pints of milk last year. On the left is the amount of food bossy consumes in a month—548 lbs. of hay, 649 lbs. of grain, 250 lbs. of dried beets and 661 lbs. of corn silage. At the right are the twenty-one cans required to hold the 2,677 lbs. of milk she gives every month.

THE VOORHEES GIRLS. Attractive society sub-debs, Nancy and Louise, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. James D. Voorhees, of New York, who are two of the star athletes of the picked team of American school girls who sailed for Paris on the Aquitania recently, to compete in the international games in Paris later this month. Nancy, a student at Miss Walker's School, specializes in the high and broad jumps, while her sister Louise is Rosemary Hall's sensational high jumper.

Right — GUNNING FOR EAGLES WITH A CAMERA. A truly remarkable camera shot of a huge American eagle about to attack the photographer who was peacefully filming the bird's nest with its three eggs that just show in the lower right corner. The unusual photo was made high up in the Rocky Mountains, the cameraman managing to fight off the infuriated bird and escape with his treasured film.
