

Ireland to Live Up to Peace Pact With England

William Cosgrave Declares Deaths of Griffith and Collins Will Not Alter Plans of Government.

Dublin, Aug. 28.—Assurance that the deaths of Arthur Griffith and Michael Collins will not alter Ireland's determination to live up to the letter of the treaty with England were contained in a letter sent to Winston Churchill by William T. Cosgrave, acting chairman of the provisional government.

The committee points out the domestic difficulties upon which the Irish government is required to devote most of its energies, but asserts that it will execute the terms of the agreement as rapidly as humanly possible.

Churchill had telegraphed Cosgrave as follows: "I take the earliest opportunity, in this hour of tragedy for Ireland and of intense difficulties for the Irish provisional government, of assuring you of the confidence felt by the British government that the treaty position will be faithfully and resolutely maintained."

"The death of two of the principal signatories, the retirement of another, and the desertion of the fourth, in no way affects the validity and sanctity of the settlement entered into with the plenipotentiaries of the Irish nation. On the contrary, we are sure that the provisional government and the Irish people will feel it all the more a sacred duty to carry into full effect the act of renunciation between the two islands."

"For our part, we hold ourselves bound on the treaty basis and will meet good faith with good faith and good will with good will to the end."

Mr. Cosgrave, who was vice chairman of the provisional government under Mr. Collins, is now fully responsible as the head of the government and is likely to remain so until the next election, which is hardly possible before January. He is a Dublin business man who has devoted much attention to politics and has been an alderman for many years.

Mr. Cosgrave has been a strong supporter of the treaty from the outset and his witty speeches in the Dail Eireann caused the minority much discomfort. His intention is to give much less time to military affairs than Michael Collins did, leaving the active direction of the army almost wholly to Gen. Richard Mulcahy, commander-in-chief and minister of defense of the Dail Eireann.

General Mulcahy, a native of Waterford, was educated at Christian Brothers college and gave up the study of medicine after he had spent three years, to assume an important role in the organization of the Irish republican army in 1916. Six months ago he was anxious to withdraw from the army and resume his medical studies. Circumstances have made it impossible, but some day he intends to be a doctor, despite Ireland and the army.

Marriage of Barry Wicklow

By RUBY M. AYRES

Copyright, 1922.

(Continued From Yesterday.) "Barry, Barry, what are you going to do?" He looked down at her, and his gray eyes were almost black in their fury.

"I'm going to kill that swine!" he said, hoarsely. "I'll break out in terror. 'Don't leave me here alone—oh, don't!' If I cared anything for him I shouldn't be here now—I shouldn't have come to you. You must know that I hate him, Barry. You must—you must believe me!"

He held her at arm's length. "And me, too, you hate me, too," he said hoarsely. "She looked up at him, the tears were running down her face; her hair tumbling about her shoulders, and in that moment she looked to him like the little girl whom he had first known and loved—the little girl who had walked with him through the woods down at Redmond, and something seemed to snap round his heart and brain, a band of relentless iron that had held him bound for so long; his white face quivered.

"Why have you come here? You told me long ago that you hated me!" he said again. "His hands tightened their grip of her. "Have you come here just because you are frightened—just because you have nowhere else to go? Or because you want me—because you want to stay with me?" he asked again, hoarsely.

"It seemed an eternity till she answered, and then the words were so low that he could hardly catch them. "Because I want to stay with you," she said in a whisper. CHAPTER XXXVII. But even now Barry did not believe her.

"You've soon changed your mind," he said with rough suspicion, and yet she did not look as if she had come there to fool him, in her soiled, torn frock and the tears wet on her face. Her little stockinged feet were half buried in the thick rug that stretched almost the length of the room, and she was sobbing quietly. She had lost her handkerchief and she brushed the tears away childishly with the back of her hands.

Barry spoke again: "It's absurd to make out that you've suddenly discovered you want to come back to me. You've made a hit—I never thought you would, but there's no doubt you have. Greaves will be offering you a contract to stay on with him, if he hasn't done so already."

"He—he has!" said Hazel on the top of a sob. Barry laughed mirthlessly. "Well, I congratulate you, but you can't have it all your own way, you know, and I'm not going to be pointed at as your husband. I always swore I would never marry a woman who was on the stage—I hate the whole beastly business."
