

THE OMAHA MORNING BEE

VOL. 52—NO. 73.

Entered as Second-Class Matter May 28, 1908, at Omaha P. O. Under Act of March 3, 1893.

OMAHA, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1922.

By Mail (1 year): Daily and Sunday, $2.50; within the 4th zone, $1.50. Outside the 4th zone (1 year): Daily and Sunday, $1.25; Sunday only, 50¢.

TWO CENTS

MURDERED MAN FOUND IN BOTTOMS

SOULS for SALE

By Rupert Hughes.

A Striking Story of a Girl's Initiation Into Movieland and Her Eventual Success—To Appear Serially in The Morning Bee.

CHAPTER I
"Los Angeles," the sneering preacher cried, as Jonah might have whinnied, "Nineveh" and with equal scorn. "The Spanish missionaries may have called it the City of Angels; but the moving pictures have changed its name to Los Diablo! For it is the central factory of Satan and his minions, the enemy of our homes, the corrupter of our young men and women—the school of crime. Unless it reforms—and soon—surely in God's good time, the ocean will rise and swallow it!"

Though he was two thousand miles or more away—as far away, indeed, as the banks of the Mississippi are from the Californian shore—the Rev. Dr. Stoddard was so convinced by his own prophetic eyes that he would hardly have been surprised to find in the Monday morning's paper that a terrible earthquake had taken his hint and shagged the new Babylon off into the Pacific sea.

But of all follies, next to indicating nations, cursing cities in the vainest And Los Angeles lived on, quite unaware that its crimes were being denounced in the far-off town of Calverly. The sun itself took two hours to make the trip, and though it was black night outside the little church in Calverly, it was just sunset in Los Angeles.

There was scarlet fire along the ocean of oceans, whoselazy waves stroked the coast with lake-like calm. Over the wide-sprawled city was a smooth sky all of a banana yellow, save for a stain of red grapes at the hem where the sky went down behind the sea wall of the Santa Monica Mountains.

Among the multitudinous gardens along the palm-plumed avenues, the twilight loaded. The day seemed to be entangled in the jewel-hung curtains, the fig trees, the papyrus clusters, the hedges, foaming with a suri of Shasta daisies, the spindrift waste of year-long roses, and the smother of vines rolling up white walls in contrary cascades and spilling a froth of flowers along the roofs of many-colored tile.

To the north lay Hollywood, the particular Hades of the cinemaphobes, but curiously demure and innocent in the sunset.

From certain surfaces there and in Culver City the light was flashed back with heliographic brilliance—from acres on acres of the glass walls and roofs of huge factories, strange workshops where the enslaved sun and the chained lightning wrote stories in photographs. Millions of miles of tiny pictures were taken at a rate of a thousand a minute. Tons of spooled romance went rolling all over the world, so that the girl and boy who embraced before one camera were later observed by coolies in Shanghai, by the Bisharin of Egypt, and the sundry peoples of Somaliland, Chilkoot, Jidda, and Alexandropol—where not? Wherever the sun traveled and the moon reigned they could watch this reeled mindlessly gleaming for the delight and guidance of mankind.

Even when the sun had set, some of the capital of the new art, some of the studios would glow on with a man-made day of their own. But most of the factories were closing now, since the toilers had begun belching in the morning and were scattering homeward for rest or study or mischief. Los Angeles, the huge Spenser, was finishing another day of its traffic in virtue, vice, laughter, love, and other woes.

Even Doctor Stoddard, if he could have seen this realm he abominated, would have confessed that the devil had a certain grace as a gardener and that his minions were a handsome, happy throng. But Doctor Stoddard had never seen Los Angeles and had never seen a moving picture. He knew that the world was going to wrack and ruin—as usual—and he laid the blame on the nearest novelty—as usual.

His daughter had heard him lay the blame in previous years on other activities. She wished he wouldn't.

But then she had not escaped blame herself, and she was in mortal dread now of a vast cloud of obloquy lowering above her and ominous with lightning.

As yet the congregation had found no grave fault with her except a certain overfervor in the hymns. Her voice had a too manifest beauty, an almost operatic zeal, as it floated from the loft of the volunteer choir—some of whom would never have been drafted if they had not volunteered.

Sundry long-faced members of the congregation felt that it was not quite respectable for a girl—particularly a clergyman's daughter—to put so much rapture into a church tune. But Youth exultant in a very fervor for life, harried the old hymn like an eagle struggling upward with a tortoise.

The words were all about a "joy divine," but the elders kept a measure in store, hanging back with a laudable trudge to save the day from the young rebel.

But one voice, silencing above the others, had especially tormented insights the old parson, across whose silvered head it went boozing like a tortoise.

Gage County Men Are Badly Hurt in Collision

(Turn to Page Two, Column Two.)

Bearcat

Beatrice, Neb., Sept. 10.—(Special)

Lewis Chipman of Plymouth may lose his sight as the result of an auto collision near Ellis with Charles Christ of Harbine, who was also severely injured. Both are in a hospital in Beatrice in a serious condition.

Could Form New System.

Against that point of view is the belief on the part of many that the transportation act gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority, in adopting a plan for consolidations, to disregard the anti-trust statutes on which the Supreme Court based its decision in the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific antitrust case. It is conceivable that the commission could form a system of roads in the west which would include the Southern Pacific and the Central Pacific.

The Union Pacific, through counsel, has issued statements designed to show the advantages that would accrue to the shipping public if the Central Pacific were joined with the Union Pacific.

Charge Traffic Diverted.

The Central Pacific and the Union Pacific connect at Ogden and their consolidation into one system would make a through east and west line.

Advocates of this plan charge that the tendency of the Southern Pacific is to divert traffic from the Central Pacific to the Southern Pacific's southern route.

Congress has been flooded with petitions for and against the continuation of the Southern Pacific-Central Pacific merger. Commercial organizations in towns and cities served by the Union Pacific in the western states have filed many of these petitions.

Commercial organizations in the central part of California have adopted resolutions favoring a continuation of the merger, while similar organizations in northern California have waged an active battle for disengagement of the Central Pacific from the Southern Pacific and the linking of it with the Union Pacific.

Get Ahead--

Best Stories in English

New York, Sept. 9.—Two awards of $1,000 and $400, will be made by Columbia university this year for the best stories published in the English language, here and abroad, during the last five years, on the history, geography, archaeology, ethnology, philology or numismatics of North America, it has been announced at the university. These awards are known as the Louisa prizes, in recognition of their donor, Joseph F. Louisa.

Awards Offered for Two

Best Stories in English

New York, Sept. 9.—Two awards of $1,000 and $400, will be made by Columbia university this year for the best stories published in the English language, here and abroad, during the last five years, on the history, geography, archaeology, ethnology, philology or numismatics of North America, it has been announced at the university. These awards are known as the Louisa prizes, in recognition of their donor, Joseph F. Louisa.

Get Ahead--

Every ambitious, alert person is on the lookout for some means to increase his income.

The "Want" Ad columns of The Omaha Bee abound in hundreds of timely hints for the person who wants to get ahead—investment opportunities—bigger jobs—a gainful transactions of many kinds.

To have your finger constantly on the pulse of business opportunities—take advantage of The Omaha Bee "Want" Ads.

Remember, The Omaha Bee "Want" Ads Bring Better Results at Lesser Cost.

Read them—use them every day. You will find that it will pay!

(Turn to Page Two, Column Two.)

Treynor Farmer Killed by His Team of Horses

Adolph C. Rosacker, 41, farmer, living near Treynor, Ia., received injuries Friday afternoon which resulted in his death a few hours later at the Nichols Sanitarium hospital in Omaha. He was driving his team from the field and had left the wagon to open the gate in a fence when the animals became frightened and bolted running over him.

The words were all about a "joy divine," but the elders kept a measure in store, hanging back with a laudable trudge to save the day from the young rebel.

But one voice, silencing above the others, had especially tormented insights the old parson, across whose silvered head it went boozing like a tortoise.

Read them—use them every day. You will find that it will pay!

(Turn to Page Two, Column Two.)

SOULS
for SALE

By Rupert Hughes.

A Striking Story of a Girl's Initiation Into Movieland and Her Eventual Success—To Appear Serially in The Morning Bee.

CHAPTER I
"Los Angeles," the sneering preacher cried, as Jonah might have whinnied, "Nineveh" and with equal scorn. "The Spanish missionaries may have called it the City of Angels; but the moving pictures have changed its name to Los Diablo! For it is the central factory of Satan and his minions, the enemy of our homes, the corrupter of our young men and women—the school of crime. Unless it reforms—and soon—surely in God's good time, the ocean will rise and swallow it!"

Though he was two thousand miles or more away—as far away, indeed, as the banks of the Mississippi are from the Californian shore—the Rev. Dr. Stoddard was so convinced by his own prophetic eyes that he would hardly have been surprised to find in the Monday morning's paper that a terrible earthquake had taken his hint and shagged the new Babylon off into the Pacific sea.

But of all follies, next to indicating nations, cursing cities in the vainest And Los Angeles lived on, quite unaware that its crimes were being denounced in the far-off town of Calverly. The sun itself took two hours to make the trip, and though it was black night outside the little church in Calverly, it was just sunset in Los Angeles.

There was scarlet fire along the ocean of oceans, whoselazy waves stroked the coast with lake-like calm. Over the wide-sprawled city was a smooth sky all of a banana yellow, save for a stain of red grapes at the hem where the sky went down behind the sea wall of the Santa Monica Mountains.

Among the multitudinous gardens along the palm-plumed avenues, the twilight loaded. The day seemed to be entangled in the jewel-hung curtains, the fig trees, the papyrus clusters, the hedges, foaming with a suri of Shasta daisies, the spindrift waste of year-long roses, and the smother of vines rolling up white walls in contrary cascades and spilling a froth of flowers along the roofs of many-colored tile.

To the north lay Hollywood, the particular Hades of the cinemaphobes, but curiously demure and innocent in the sunset.

From certain surfaces there and in Culver City the light was flashed back with heliographic brilliance—from acres on acres of the glass walls and roofs of huge factories, strange workshops where the enslaved sun and the chained lightning wrote stories in photographs. Millions of miles of tiny pictures were taken at a rate of a thousand a minute. Tons of spooled romance went rolling all over the world, so that the girl and boy who embraced before one camera were later observed by coolies in Shanghai, by the Bisharin of Egypt, and the sundry peoples of Somaliland, Chilkoot, Jidda, and Alexandropol—where not? Wherever the sun traveled and the moon reigned they could watch this reeled mindlessly gleaming for the delight and guidance of mankind.

Even when the sun had set, some of the capital of the new art, some of the studios would glow on with a man-made day of their own. But most of the factories were closing now, since the toilers had begun belching in the morning and were scattering homeward for rest or study or mischief. Los Angeles, the huge Spenser, was finishing another day of its traffic in virtue, vice, laughter, love, and other woes.

Even Doctor Stoddard, if he could have seen this realm he abominated, would have confessed that the devil had a certain grace as a gardener and that his minions were a handsome, happy throng. But Doctor Stoddard had never seen Los Angeles and had never seen a moving picture. He knew that the world was going to wrack and ruin—as usual—and he laid the blame on the nearest novelty—as usual.

His daughter had heard him lay the blame in previous years on other activities. She wished he wouldn't.

But then she had not escaped blame herself, and she was in mortal dread now of a vast cloud of obloquy lowering above her and ominous with lightning.

As yet the congregation had found no grave fault with her except a certain overfervor in the hymns. Her voice had a too manifest beauty, an almost operatic zeal, as it floated from the loft of the volunteer choir—some of whom would never have been drafted if they had not volunteered.

Sundry long-faced members of the congregation felt that it was not quite respectable for a girl—particularly a clergyman's daughter—to put so much rapture into a church tune. But Youth exultant in a very fervor for life, harried the old hymn like an eagle struggling upward with a tortoise.

The words were all about a "joy divine," but the elders kept a measure in store, hanging back with a laudable trudge to save the day from the young rebel.

But one voice, silencing above the others, had especially tormented insights the old parson, across whose silvered head it went boozing like a tortoise.

Read them—use them every day. You will find that it will pay!

(Turn to Page Two, Column Two.)

SOULS
for SALE

By Rupert Hughes.

A Striking Story of a Girl's Initiation Into Movieland and Her Eventual Success—To Appear Serially in The Morning Bee.

CHAPTER I
"Los Angeles," the sneering preacher cried, as Jonah might have whinnied, "Nineveh" and with equal scorn. "The Spanish missionaries may have called it the City of Angels; but the moving pictures have changed its name to Los Diablo! For it is the central factory of Satan and his minions, the enemy of our homes, the corrupter of our young men and women—the school of crime. Unless it reforms—and soon—surely in God's good time, the ocean will rise and swallow it!"

Though he was two thousand miles or more away—as far away, indeed, as the banks of the Mississippi are from the Californian shore—the Rev. Dr. Stoddard was so convinced by his own prophetic eyes that he would hardly have been surprised to find in the Monday morning's paper that a terrible earthquake had taken his hint and shagged the new Babylon off into the Pacific sea.

But of all follies, next to indicating nations, cursing cities in the vainest And Los Angeles lived on, quite unaware that its crimes were being denounced in the far-off town of Calverly. The sun itself took two hours to make the trip, and though it was black night outside the little church in Calverly, it was just sunset in Los Angeles.

There was scarlet fire along the ocean of oceans, whoselazy waves stroked the coast with lake-like calm. Over the wide-sprawled city was a smooth sky all of a banana yellow, save for a stain of red grapes at the hem where the sky went down behind the sea wall of the Santa Monica Mountains.

Among the multitudinous gardens along the palm-plumed avenues, the twilight loaded. The day seemed to be entangled in the jewel-hung curtains, the fig trees, the papyrus clusters, the hedges, foaming with a suri of Shasta daisies, the spindrift waste of year-long roses, and the smother of vines rolling up white walls in contrary cascades and spilling a froth of flowers along the roofs of many-colored tile.

To the north lay Hollywood, the particular Hades of the cinemaphobes, but curiously demure and innocent in the sunset.

From certain surfaces there and in Culver City the light was flashed back with heliographic brilliance—from acres on acres of the glass walls and roofs of huge factories, strange workshops where the enslaved sun and the chained lightning wrote stories in photographs. Millions of miles of tiny pictures were taken at a rate of a thousand a minute. Tons of spooled romance went rolling all over the world, so that the girl and boy who embraced before one camera were later observed by coolies in Shanghai, by the Bisharin of Egypt, and the sundry peoples of Somaliland, Chilkoot, Jidda, and Alexandropol—where not? Wherever the sun traveled and the moon reigned they could watch this reeled mindlessly gleaming for the delight and guidance of mankind.

Even when the sun had set, some of the capital of the new art, some of the studios would glow on with a man-made day of their own. But most of the factories were closing now, since the toilers had begun belching in the morning and were scattering homeward for rest or study or mischief. Los Angeles, the huge Spenser, was finishing another day of its traffic in virtue, vice, laughter, love, and other woes.

Even Doctor Stoddard, if he could have seen this realm he abominated, would have confessed that the devil had a certain grace as a gardener and that his minions were a handsome, happy throng. But Doctor Stoddard had never seen Los Angeles and had never seen a moving picture. He knew that the world was going to wrack and ruin—as usual—and he laid the blame on the nearest novelty—as usual.

His daughter had heard him lay the blame in previous years on other activities. She wished he wouldn't.

But then she had not escaped blame herself, and she was in mortal dread now of a vast cloud of obloquy lowering above her and ominous with lightning.

As yet the congregation had found no grave fault with her except a certain overfervor in the hymns. Her voice had a too manifest beauty, an almost operatic zeal, as it floated from the loft of the volunteer choir—some of whom would never have been drafted if they had not volunteered.

Sundry long-faced members of the congregation felt that it was not quite respectable for a girl—particularly a clergyman's daughter—to put so much rapture into a church tune. But Youth exultant in a very fervor for life, harried the old hymn like an eagle struggling upward with a tortoise.

The words were all about a "joy divine," but the elders kept a measure in store, hanging back with a laudable trudge to save the day from the young rebel.

But one voice, silencing above the others, had especially tormented insights the old parson, across whose silvered head it went boozing like a tortoise.

Read them—use them every day. You will find that it will pay!

(Turn to Page Two, Column Two.)

SOULS
for
SALE