SLEEPY-TIME TALES
FURTHER TALES OF JIMMY RABBIT
BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

The White Rabbit that Wouldn't Run Away.
It was a lovely night in summer. Jimmy Rabbit was feeling very happy. He had just enjoyed a delicate supper of cabbage and turnips in Farmer Green's garden. And now he was hopping about the dooryard of the farmhouse, smiling because he knew that old dog Spot was fast asleep in his little house near by.

"Boity toity!" cried Jimmy Rabbit. "I certainly am!"

"Spot would be surprised if he knew who was calling here tonight," Jimmy chuckled. And there, as he turned a corner of the farmhouse, he had a surprise himself. Inside a wire runway, a white Rabbit stood and stared at him.

"Hello!" said Jimmy. "Where did you come from?"

"Are you addressing me?" the white bunny asked somewhat coolly.

"Boity toity!" cried Jimmy Rabbit. "I certainly am. Did you think I was talking to old dog Spot?"

The white bunny shivered.

"That terrible creature!" he exclaimed. "I can't bear the sight of him. I wish I'd never left my home in the village."

"Oh!" said Jimmy Rabbit. "So you came from the village?"

"I did," answered the stranger. "I've never known anything about farm life. I thought I'd like it. But I find I was mistaken."

"What's the matter with farm life?" Jimmy Rabbit asked the white bunny.

"It's not elegant enough for me," the other explained. "At home, in the village, my mistress tied a pink ribbon around my neck every morning. Really, I feel quite lost without that pretty pink bow under my chin."

Jimmy Rabbit stared at the white bunny as if he could hardly believe it was all true.

"Well," he said at last, "you've got a kind mistress here. They say that Mrs. Green—"

"I have no mistress at all now," the newcomer interrupted in a complaining voice. "At home I belonged to a sweet little girl. Here I belong to a horrid rough boy. He picks me up by the ears! I've never been treated so rudely in all my life."

"Oh!" said Jimmy Rabbit. "So you belong to Johnnie Green, eh?"

The white bunny nodded.

"Who's your owner?" he asked his caller.

Jimmy Rabbit looked surprised.

"I haven't any," he replied.

"I suppose nobody wants you," the white person went on. "Being a common wild rabbit, you're not the sort that people care to have for a pet. A pink ribbon wouldn't look stylish against your yellowish-brownish coat."

Jimmy Rabbit grunted.

"Ribbon," he said, "are not my style. You won't find many of us country creatures wearing such gew-gaws."

The stranger winced at Jimmy's speech.

"I don't use words like that in the village," he murmured. "We talk very elegantly down there."

"Why don't you go back there, then?" Jimmy asked the white bunny bluntly.

"I would if I could; but how can I?" the white stranger retorted. "Can't you see that I'm in a sort of cage?"

"Huh! I could dig my way out of that quickly enough," Jimmy Rabbit declared. "Look! Do you see that corner over there? Johnnie Green's wire fence doesn't cover it. Get to work, friend, and you'll be out here with me before you know it."

"Pardon me!" said the white bunny. "I didn't know I was a friend of yours."

"Well, you are," Jimmy told him gallantly. "I've made a friend of mine, and I'm a friend of yours."

The white gentleman looked doubtful about that.

"I never had any friends who were common wild rabbits," he remarked. "I don't know what my friends down in the village would say if they saw me talking to you."

"They'd say you were lucky," Jimmy Rabbit said tartly. To tell the truth, he was beginning to lose patience with the tricky stranger. Still, Jimmy didn't like to see anybody cowed up in a cage.

"How do you escape?" he reminded Johnnie Green's new pet. "Do hurry and dig your way out."

But the dainty pet hesitated. He looked down at himself.

"I can't dig without getting my paws all grimy," he objected.

"That's not a little," too much for Jimmy Rabbit. Then and there he made up his mind that the stranger deserved to remain a prisoner.

"Good night—and good-bye!" Jimmy said to him. "If by any accident you ever find yourself free, maybe you'll be glad to know there are lots of fresh vegetables just beyond the fence, in the garden."

"Oh! I wouldn't think of gathering vegetables myself," the white bunny told him. "Down in the village we white Rabbits never do that. My mistress always served me fresh lettuce leaves, every morning, and gave me a slab of nice water to drink."

Jimmy Rabbit went away muttering to himself.

"I wish to a goodness that Rabbit!" he said. "But I'd like to see what anybody else would do with me!"
