

Many Intersectional Football Games Scheduled for 1922 Season

Teams Coached by Brothers Will Vie for Supremacy When Iowa and Yale Meet at Iowa City This Fall

Another "brother" combination will be featured in the football spotlight this fall. Famous "spot" units have been conspicuous in football for years, but when Yale and Iowa plunge into action in the Yale bowl, New Haven, October 14, it will be the first time on record that brothers have been viewed in the role of rival coaches. Tad Jones of Yale is a full-fledged brother of Howard Jones, the Iowa university coach.

An interesting angle of this meeting of "Ma" Jones' boys is furnished in the fact that both Tad and Howard applied for the coaching berth at Iowa back in the dim dark days when each was first coming into prominence. Howard won out, and now Tad will have a chance to prove that the Iowa authorities were mistaken.

Yale will undoubtedly feature a flashing game in defending the east against the western invaders. Although Malcolm Aldrich is lost to the Yale secondary defense, prospects were never brighter for a "big" Eli year.

Iowa won the middle-west conference championship last year and rounded out a brilliant season under Captain Devine by kicking Notre Dame, 10 to 7. Captain Devine, Belding, Duke Slater, the sensational colored tackle, and Locke were the main cogs in the 1921 Iowa machine, and Brother Howard intends to have the contraption well oiled when the brothers arrive at the Connecticut amphitheater.

Canada May Adopt Rowing for Colleges

Intercollegiate rowing will likely be initiated in Canada with McGill university and the University of Toronto as the principal contenders. A proposal has been made that at the eastern regatta, to be held at Lacine next summer, a crew from McGill meet Toronto in an eight-oared race. Toronto are champions of Canada in senior eights and finished third in the national regatta at Philadelphia behind Dufuth and West Philadelphia crews.

Guilford Putts With Mashie

Dethroned National Champ Advocates Long Game and Minimizes Putting.

New York, Sept. 16.—(Special).—The feat of Jesse Guilford in getting the low medal score at Brookline shows that a champion golfer has to be able to putt with a mashie on water-covered ground. This requires resource and initiative, because in a rainstorm the conditions are not the same on any two greens.

Guilford is one of those advocates of the long game who argue that the importance of putting is exaggerated. He says that during the past season there has been a tendency to over-emphasize the importance of the putt. Golf is by no means a one-shot game, as the putting advocates would make one believe, according to the champion's way of thinking. In this respect he is like Vardon, who still maintains that the most important shot in the game is the approach to the green.

Guilford's work in the qualifying round made putting under adverse circumstances look fairly easy. If he can putt as effectively on the smooth, dry greens as he did in the deluge, his argument will have to be taken seriously.

Young Dick Glendon started his career as successor to his dad as rowing coach at the United States Naval academy, by seeing his eight beat Annapolis of Baltimore.

Golf Bug Walks 53 Miles in 22 Rounds From Dawn to Dark

THE Marathon golf championship of the United States was claimed by Arthur E. Velguth, aged 44, a contractor, who played 22 rounds on the Spokane Down River golf course—a feat that required a walk of about 53 miles.

He began play at 5:20 a. m. The 22d round was completed at 7:30 p. m. The 198 holes were played with an average of 5.4 strokes each, total 1,069 strokes. The course is par 36 and Velguth's average round was 48.59. Play was continuous. Caddy Bobby Willard taking all available short cuts and Velguth walking about three and a half miles an hour.

Available records show that three years ago Edward Styles of the York Road Country club, near Philadelphia, played 10 times around the 6,010-yard course between 5:33 a. m. and 8:32 p. m., making a total of 796 strokes and walking nearly 40 miles. The Philadelphia man, however, took 43 minutes out for lunch and changed his shoes at intervals. Velguth and his caddy went lunchless and without a change of footwear.

Age Will Improve Her

New York, Sept. 16.—(Special).—In another season Miss Helen Willis, the 16-year-old tennis player from the Pacific coast, will have more strength and stamina and will have benefited by the present long campaign of tournament play. She already has a variety of shots and accurate execution.

The prophecy that the coast girl will be the world's best woman player may be realized sooner than even the experts expect.

Leonard May Meet Tendler in Return Bout; Brennan-Dempsey Go Slated for Boyles' Pasture

New York, Sept. 11.—It is reported that Benny Leonard, world's lightweight champion, probably will meet Tendler in a return title match to a decision at the Polo Grounds, New York, in October.

Richard, Jack Kearns and Floyd Fitzsimmons met in a secret conference here recently and it was agreed if possible to have Dempsey and Brennan go on in a 12-round bout at Boyle's Thirty Acres, Jersey City, some time this month. Arrangements it is said, are now being made with the New Jersey authorities and Richard is confident the bout will be permitted, because he plans to back up the main card with a strong semi-windup and stage the show at reasonable rates.

Whether New Jersey will permit a match that Leonard and Tendler are likely to meet in a world's lightweight championship encounter at the Polo Grounds in October came from a man in Philadelphia who is close to Phil Glassman, Tendler's manager.

The negro challenger immediately after knocking out "Fritz" Satterfield in a heavy fight, declared himself ready to fight Dempsey today, tomorrow or any subsequent day in the work selected by the champion.

Wills makes no conditions, asks no favors, but just puts to the con-

Maroons-Tiger, Iowa-Yale Tilts Feature Battles

Notre Dame Will Meet Army, Georgia Tech and Carnegie Tech in Intersectional Tilts.

By WALTER ECKERSALL.

With leading football elevens in all sections of the country hard at work in preparation for opening games some of which will be played on September 30, a lot of interest will center around the many intersectional struggles between leading elevens of their respective sections.

Although there has been a strong tendency on the part of some college officials to discourage intersectional contests, these games attract so much interest and go so far to bring teams of the various sections into a closer athletic relationship that they are looked upon as an elevating influence.

Iowa to Play Yale.

Iowa, which won the undisputed championship of the western conference last fall, together with the western title, will go to New Haven on October 14 to meet Yale, always a strong contender for gridiron honors along the Atlantic seaboard, while the Hawkeyes will not be as strong as the great machine of a year ago.

In fact, Jones would not have slated the game if he did not know the sort of material he will have with which to develop this year's eleven. Even during the spring practice, the Hawkeye mentor harped on the Yale game and it is an assured fact that the eleven at Iowa City is being pointed to the New Haven contest, although Iowa will open its season against Knox October 7. Tad Jones, a brother of the Iowa coach, is head mentor at Yale and it will be interesting to follow the offensive and defensive tactics of both elevens.

Princeton to Chicago.

Princeton, who was defeated by Chicago last year on the Tigers' gridiron, 9 to 0, will come west for the return engagement with the Maroons on Stagg field, October 28. This struggle should exclude any other intersectional contest to be played by the mid-west eleven in this section. If the Yale-Iowa game were to be played at Iowa City, it would rank as just as great importance, but the fact Princeton is coming west, something unheard of as far as the Big Three is concerned, makes the contest the banner one of the year between elevens of different sections.

Whether the Tigers will take the game seriously remains to be seen. Last year Don Lourie, the quarterback and Gharrity, the fullback, were kept out of the game to be used in the Yale and Harvard struggles. Gharrity did go in toward the end of the struggle when it was absolutely lost. On the other hand Coach Stagg can be relied upon to send his strength into this struggle, and a victory will mean a successful year on the Midway.

Michigan Against Vanderbilt.

Aside from Chicago, two other western conference elevens will engage in intersectional contests. Michigan will journey to Nashville to assist in the dedicatory ceremonies of the Vanderbilt stadium. This will be a game for the south and preparations already are being made to entertain a capacity crowd. Coach Vost of Michigan and Dan McGuire of Vanderbilt are brothers-in-law, but a great contest generally results when the two elevens meet. The game will be played October 14.

Indiana will entertain West Virginia at Bloomington in the big homecoming struggle at Bloomington on November 11. The Mountaineers, as West Virginia is known in football circles, are generally a strong aggregation.

Classy Field in Cue Tournay

Schaefer, Hoppe, Cochran, Conti, and Horemans Greatest Stars Entered.

There have been many predictions in billiard circles recently as to what is going to happen in the international tournament scheduled at New York in November.

One of the six probable starters is Schaefer, the world champion; Hoppe, the champion of the world; Cochran, Conti, Horemans, and Hagelbacher all young men and getting better every day, it is hard to pick the winner.

The players, too, are a very retiring lot and seldom talk of their prospects. One of the hardest to draw out is "Young" Jake Schaefer, a wonderfully quiet and sedate sort of chap, who seldom speaks to anyone except when spoken to.

The other day, however, unknowningly, perhaps, "Young" Jake, in a letter to H. F. Daveport, secretary and general manager of the Brunswick-Balke-Cordes company, discussed the championship and gave his views as to just what might happen.

Classy Field Entered.

"Take my word for it," says Jake, "in this tournament there will be a higher class of billiards played than ever before. Willie Hoppe, for example, may be among those present. Many billiard fans think Hoppe has gone back merely because he lost to me in the last international and in our last challenge match at Chicago. "As a matter of fact, however, Hoppe played the best billiards of his career on at least one of those occasions, averaging 49 for the match and 69 for the last look. When you come to consider that Hoppe won his title with an average of 18, it is clear that he has not fallen off in his play in the last.

"As to Roger Conti of France, Edouard Horemans of Belgium, Erich Hagelbacher of Germany and Welker Cochran of Iowa, I consider every one of them wonderful players and liable to beat anybody any time they start.

Expects to Retain Title.

"Naturally, too, I think I will again be able to outplay them, but only after a tough battle.

In fact, I will admit at this writing that I feel the football will have to play the very best billiards of my career to retain the world's 18-2 ball line championship.

Strong Showing of Cubs, Sox Is Year's Surprise

Splendid Performance of Chicago Teams Due to Brainy Piloting of Managers Killefer and Gleason.

By I. E. SANBORN.

Although they will have to be content with a city series instead of a world's championship contest this fall, Chicago fans have good reason to feel proud of their two major league teams and to shake hands with their managers.

In a way it is true that the fans have the habit of remembering only the pennant winners and the tail-enders each year and carry only have recollections of the intermediate berths, but the cases of the Cubs and White Sox this season are entirely different.

Practically all the expert forecasts of the 1922 pennant race, except those emanating from Chicago, rated the Windy City teams as sure tail-enders. There wasn't any hesitation about it nor any qualifications of the opinions expressed. The doers could not figure any way for Bill Killefer or Kid Gleason to keep their outfits from finishing last in October and awarded them the positions so long held by the two Philadelphia teams.

Build Up Material.

Even the forecasts by Chicago writers were modest in their estimates. They held out hopes of first division honors for both teams, but too confidently, and memory does not recall any rosette pictures of pennant contenders. Yet the Cubs and White Sox have been considered distinctly in the running at different times, and that after the fact.

Bill Gleason.

Neither Chicago team may wind up in the first division. The contests for position are close in both leagues and the season has some distance to go yet, but both will be close to the top of the heap. If not actually in it, and a goodly number of the position are there from the cellar to the top to which they were so unanimously doomed in March and April.

In thus fooling the experts neither Killefer nor Gleason has been able to do like the New York clubs in purchasing from friendly rivals strong reinforcements in the shape of well developed players. What reinforcements they have obtained have been gained by picking players out of the discard or recruiting them from the bushes. Otherwise they have had to work with the material at their disposal in spring training. That material the experts looked over and declared it would not do for anything except a last place outfit.

Loss of Kerr Handicap.

Moreover, Gleason was handicapped more than the forecasters expected by the desertion of Dick Kerr, who was included in the Six pitching staff in the spring. Although he was then a holdout, what the grizzled veteran would have done with his team if he had Kerr for slush duty from the start of the season can be guessed from the fact that the small southpaw turned in 19 wins for the Sox in 1921, when they finished far down in the spring. Killefer, too, was hampered at the outset by the slow start of one or two of the regulars. They did not hit their natural strides until late, and still the Cubs became second place contenders for the pennant.

What the doers failed to estimate at its full value last spring was the fighting spirit which the Cubs and Chicago managers are able to instill into their followers and the infinite patience both of them have with promising young players. It requires a lot of personal magnetism and shuck for the Chicago pilots to lead their players of the depression naturally born of the knowledge that they were rated as tailenders by nearly everybody. The spirit of a baseball team counts for a great deal on the playing field. They filled their followers with the belief that they were underrated, then went out and proved it to the baseball world.

Patience Is Big Aid.

There is no one who has more patience with a promising prospect or a slipping veteran than Gleason. He proved it this year by getting more than a few winning games out of pitchers who had been waived out of the major league, although he has had a shorter time to develop leadership. Neither of them will give up trying to make a player of ability. Good quality patience means to be a virtue. Witness the length of time Gleason held on to Wood Martin and Killefer on to Wood Martin.

Rules Jockeys Must Follow

In Australia there is a rule in force requiring a rider, once he has entered the jockeys' room at the race track, to remain there until the day's racing is finished and to keep absolutely away from the public. The rule applies whether a jockey is working or not.

Charm, British Champion Horse, in Gotham Show

New York has a chance this fall to see England's most famous harness horse, the mare Charm, who has swept all classes in the International Horse shows, London, for two years. Probably Charm is today the most famous harness horse in the world. She belongs to William S. Miller of Perthshire, Scotland, who judged the hackney breeding classes in the National Horse show in New York last year, and there is more than a good chance of Mr. Miller sending her over to beat everything in America as she has abroad.

If Charm comes here, there will be another international sport contest, and one that will be unparalleled in the horse world. It will take all the resources of Judge William H. Moore and his show friends to compete with her. For Charm has never had to lower her colors to any horse but once. That was in July at the Cambridge Royal show when, in one of the harness classes, she was given the red ribbon, and another famous English horse, Park Carnation, got the blue. Outside of this Charm has been invincible in the championship for the Royal Horse show in Richmond, England, last year, attaining the greatest honor of all, the championship at the International this summer.

When Charm gets to New York she will have the interesting experience of competing against her own sire in the ring. Her sire is Field Marshal, an English harness horse very famous.

Johnny Weissmuller Let Go Because He Was Too Slow

But for a slip the Chicago Athletic club would now have the honor of having Johnny Weissmuller representing them.

A little more than a year ago somebody saw championship possibilities in Weissmuller and brought him to the Chicago Athletic club for a trial. But Weissmuller wasn't fast enough for them and they let him go. A short time later, he was brought to Bill Bachrach, coach of the Illinois Athletic club, who immediately saw possibilities in the chap.

Under Bachrach's instructions Johnny three months later won his first district championship, after which his rise was rapid.

Thorpe Indian Team to Add Wild West Show to Games

Jim Thorpe's all-Indian football 11 of Marion, O., will give a wild west performance as an added attraction to its professional matches.

Burgess May Try to Swim English Channel Again

T. W. Burgess, who swam across the English channel 11 years ago, is now 53 years old and plans another try before the cold weather sets in.

Following the regular playing season, some middle or far eastern elevens will be invited to make the trip to the Pacific coast to meet the Rocky Mountain conference winner in the big New Year's day game.

Champ Skater Here

Jimmy Burke, world's champion ice skater, and his wife, known on the stage as Edna Blue, are entertainers at Ak-Sar-Ben field. They have a chemical preparation which answers as a makeshift for ice. Burke and his wife are known here, having entertained at an ice rink here one season.
