Food Hints

Corn Starch Cake.
One cup butter, two cups sugar, one cup milk, one cup corn starch, two cups flour, sifted before measuring, four and one-half level teaspoons baking powder, whites of five eggs beaten stiffly, three-fourths teaspoon almond extract. Cream butter and sugar gradually, then add the milk and flour mixed and sifted, with the corn starch and baking powder, last the stiffly beaten whites and flavoring. This makes two cakes.

Raisin Buttermilk Bread.
Two cups maize, two cups whole wheat flour, one-third cup shortening, one and a half teaspoons salt, one teaspoon soda, two cooking spoons sugar syrup, one egg, one cup small raisins, sufficient buttermilk to make stiff dough. This makes one large loaf.

My Marriage Problems

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife" (Copyright 1922)

Why Did Dr. Pettit Ask Where Dicky Is?

In an emergency calling for his professional skill all of Dr. Pettit's unpleasant mannerisms and his shyness seem to slip from his shoulders as a cloak might do, leaving a readiness, a sureness of his own power, coupled with an adequate authority, which spell assurance and safety to his patients and their friends. There is no man, I think, whose personal mannerisms I dislike so much, yet there is none to whose skill I would more readily trust my loved ones.

His quick, low-toned direction to Lillian to have the man Smith brought upstairs was followed by an equally quick, but almost curt command to me.

"Please show me the room where young Chester is."

It was not until in his wake I reached the foot of the stairs, that my confused brain realized the absurdity of his question. He must have visited young Chester before his collapse, which occurred to me, and I was just reproaching myself for its absurdity, when he stopped abruptly and looked at me with an odd, strained expression.

That he wished to speak to me unheard by anyone else—this was the only explanation which occurred to me, and I was just reproaching myself for its absurdity, when he stopped abruptly and looked at me with an odd, strained expression.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Our Love Affairs.
Dear Miss Fairfax: Why is it that some girls are lucky in love affairs while others are unlucky? Is it their environment or character that causes this? All the loves that have come into my life have been more or less undesirable; at least they have not been what I wanted. Now, at the age of 30 I find I have innocently fallen in love with a man whom I supposed was single. There is nothing to do now but think of him impersonally, though it breaks my heart, as he represents all that I had dreamed of having for my own some day, and you can realize what a struggle I am undergoing, as I am obliged to meet him quite frequently in the business world. I have never been a love pirate and I never want to steal the affection that belongs to another and thus cause unhappiness, but why is it that I have been denied that fine, clean, satisfying love for which I have always yearned and which comes to many a girl? It looks as though I will have to let him go and it makes me so blue. If any of your readers have had the same problem to face, please allow them to tell me how they worked out their salvation. GTHHEMANE.

Character and environment may have something to do with misfortune in love, but sometimes there is no answer except to fall back on a sort of fatalism, to explain such things. There is no more reason for them than there is for the suffering which good, kind-hearted people have to bear when they have done nothing to deserve it. There is no more reason why on a battlefield one man will be killed while the man next him covers the same territory unscathed. It is life, that's all. There is such a thing as plain bad luck, and one does not have to be superstitious to admit it. What explanation there is often lies in some error in judgment on the part of the person involved. Somewhere along the line, if they had made a different decision, the catastrophe might have been avoided. Your only error that I can see lay in letting yourself become attached to the man without finding out that he had other ties. If he lied to you about it, you have only him to blame, and I should say you are well off of me, and I was just reproaching myself for its absurdity, when he stopped abruptly and looked at me with an odd, strained expression.

Our word for it!
You'll never know how delicious Corn Flakes can be till you eat Kellogg's

Positively—the most joyously good any-time-cereal any man or woman or child ever put in their mouths! Such flavor, such crispness! Such big sunny-brown Corn Flakes! How you'll relish a generous bowl-filled-most-to-overflowing; and a pitcher of milk or cream! Never was such a set-out! Never did you get such a universal vote as there'll be for Kellogg's Corn Flakes! Big folks and little folks will say "Kellogg's, please, mother!" Leave it to their tastes—and yours! Prove out all we say!

For, Kellogg's Corn Flakes are a revelation in flavor; a revelation in all-time crispness! Kellogg's are never tough or leathery or hard to eat! Insist upon KELLOGG'S—the original Corn Flakes—the kind in the RED and GREEN packages!

"Where is your husband?" he asked abruptly.

"Are You Sure?" His manner was almost offensive, and my answer was as curt as I could decently manage.

"In the Auditoriums." He started perceptibly, and his eyes narrowed.

"Are you sure?" he demanded. I stared at him in resentful amazement, and he turned his eyes away from mine quickly.

"I beg your pardon," he muttered. "And—I don't need you. I know the way."

"I knew you did." I could not help to retort, but I made it only when I was in full retreat toward the library.

I found Lillian directing the transportation of the man Smith. "He's a bit heavy to carry," she decided. "Loosen his ankle bonds enough to enable him to take very short steps. Then with one of you on either side, but with his hands bound, he'll be safe enough. But look out for him. An eel is a turtle on his back compared to him."

There was a vanity in Smith's eyes and I guessed that Lillian had made the comment purposely. And when the operatives had carried out her directions and escorted the scowling but quiescent Smith through the door, she confirmed my guess in a hasty parting word before following the men.

A Puzzling Question.
"Did you see him swallow it?" she whispered gleefully. "We want to feel him all we dare of that stuff to make him think we're terribly afraid of his getting loose. If his conceit gets sufficiently inflated, he won't be so apt to reflect on the ease with which he is going to escape our custody after awhile."

"You're really going to let him go then?" I whispered back, and wished I had not spoken when I saw an annoyance flash into Lillian's eyes.

"We have to," she said shortly. Then she spoke again quickly before I had time to voice apology for my banality.

"There's really no use of your coming with me," she said. "It won't be exactly a pleasant experience, I fancy. And Katie needs no attention. Dr. Pettit attended to her throat and gave her a mild sleeping draught. She's safe until tomorrow morning.

"But for the love of the family's peace," her eyes twinkled, "do go to your mother-in-law. She gave me her word that no matter what she heard she wouldn't come out of her room, but can you imagine her state of mind with all this hullabaloo? She has too much common sense to be frightened, but her curiosity and longing to be in the middle of things will kill her sure, if she isn't given some news pretty soon. I know—"

As I made an involuntary gesture of apprehensive reluctance—"Daniel sticking his little nose in the lion's den will have nothing on you, but it's got to be done. And I'll promise you won't miss the picnic with Smith later. Think of that, and it will keep your spirits up."

She nodded me a gay adieu and was gone. But it was not of the coming interview with Smith that I was thinking as I slowly climbed the stairs to my mother-in-law's room. It was of Dr. Pettit's unaccountable question as to the whereabouts of my husband.

Any one can make money and any one can spend it, but few can save it.

Chamber of Commerce Plans Membership Drive

The Omaha Chamber of Commerce plans this year to add 1,000 new members to its roster in celebration of its 30th anniversary. A special campaign will be carried on among the business men of Omaha by the membership committee.

According to J. David Larson, commissioner, probably the most enterprising program of activities in the history of the organization is to be undertaken by committees recently appointed.

To Free Your Arms of Hair or Fuzz

(Honor Secret)
No toilet table is complete without a small package of delatone, for with it hair or fuzz can be quickly banished from the skin. To remove hairs you merely mix into a paste enough of the powder and water to cover the objectionable hairs. This should be left on the skin about 2 minutes, then rubbed off and the skin washed, when it will be found free from hair or blemish. Be sure you get genuine delatone.
