SLEEPY-TIME TALES OF JIMMY RABBIT

The Rooster That Wouldn't Work. CHAPTER XXIV. Nibbling at a choice head of lettuce in Farmer Green's garden one morning, Jimmy Rabbit heard sounds of trouble.

"That's Henrietta Hen," Jimmy Rabbit decided after he had listened for a few moments. "I wonder what has displeased her."

Nothing like that had ever happened to the Rooster before.

Nothing like that had ever happened to the Rooster before. He was frightened. And standing with his back to the side of the barn he squawled for help.

"I despise a snark," she declared. The Rooster now made a dash and tried to slip past the angry Henrietta. But she headed him off and drove him back into his corner.

"I've not finished with you yet, sir," she snapped. "The Rooster pleaded that he had an important engagement and couldn't stay there any longer."

"Let me pass, please!" he begged her then. "I don't feel well. I need a drink of water."

"None!" she cried. "You've never been ill in your life."

"Do let me say a few words!" he begged her. "I've a very good reason for not helping you!"

"Huh!" Henrietta Hen exclaimed, with returned nose. "What is it?" "If I scratched for your family, all the other Hens in the flock would insist on my helping them, too. And I couldn't very well refuse. I'd be so overworked that I wouldn't have enough strength left to crow."

screamed. "Why are you four scamps annoying the Rooster?" Jimmy Rabbit hastened to explain that they had come to talk to the hen, good-for-nothing Rooster and make him help her scratch worms for her chicks.

To Jimmy's great surprise, Henrietta Hen turned upon him with fury in her beady eyes.

"I'll scratch you if you don't go away and leave the Rooster alone," she threatened. "I'll peck you—and your three worthless friends." And she actually began to call Jimmy Rabbit and his chums all the names that she had called the Rooster earlier in the morning.

"Don't be angry, madam!" Jimmy cried. "We want to do you a good turn. I overheard you scolding the Rooster."

Henrietta Hen started. "Huh! You were eavesdropping," she squawled. And she grew angrier than ever. "Of course I can scold the Rooster if I want to," she snapped. "Who has a better right than I? But you needn't think I'll let anybody else scold him. Go away and leave him alone."

She dashed at Jimmy Rabbit, who turned and ran, with his three friends scurrying after him. The Rooster crowed boldly as they hurried up the lane. And then they heard Henrietta Hen say to him, "Don't strain your voice on account of those lousy bodies! There's nobody in the valley with as fine a crow as yours!"

And Jimmy Rabbit made up his mind then that he would never again meddle in other people's family affairs.

Birth Announcements. Compliments are being extended to Mr. and Mrs. P. F. Peterson on the birth of a son on Sunday to their daughter, Luella, who is now Mrs. L. L. Mar of Rapid City, S. D. Mrs. L. L. Mar has named the child William.

Announcement is made of the birth of a daughter, Alice Caswell, to Mr. and Mrs. B. Brewer, Saturday, September 23.

Carelessly chaperoned young girls are sometimes, it is true, seen in very questionable places because some of the so-called dancing restaurants are perfectly fit and proper for them to go to; many other places, however, are not, and for the sake of general appearances it is safe to make it a rule that no very young girl should go anywhere after the theater except to a private house or a private dance or ball.

Nearly all the faults or mistakes in conversation are caused by not thinking. For instance, a first rule for behavior in society is: "Try to do and say those things only which will be agreeable to others."
