

State Sleuths
Raid Pop Saloon
at Wisner, Neb.

Owner Doesn't Have Time to Cut String on Dumb Waiter
—He and Bartender
Are Arrested.

Lincoln, Oct. 2.—(Special)—State Sheriff Gus Myers didn't go to church Sunday.

Neither did Federal Boozie Sleuths Carroll and Patton.

They went riding instead—on the governor's "hip."

Over to Wisner, paraded Sheriff Gus' motor car, and into the pop saloon of Paul Krocher slipped the gumshoe tize.

Before Krocher had a chance to get away, they slipped behind the counter and discovered seven pints of moonshine all cached in a slick contrivance.

It was on a dumb waiter suspended in a chute which made a short drop of 30 feet through a cellar into a lower recess.

But Krocher hadn't time to cut the string and the officers seized the booze.

They also seized Krocher and his bookkeeper, Emory Worrell, whom they took back to Lincoln with the moonshine.

"The governor asked us to make the raid," said the state sheriff. "Women of the town have been complaining that their husbands and some come out of the place reeling and drunk."

Myers said charges would be preferred against both men and an injunction to close the place will be sought in the courts.

Northwestern Railroad
Restores Limited Trains

Clinton, Ia., Oct. 2.—Restoration of the Los Angeles Limited, west bound train No. 7 and east bound train No. 8, was announced by the Northwestern railway. The train was removed during the recent strike of railway shoguns.

ADVERTISING
If Piles, Send
For Pyramid

Pyramid Pile Suppositories Are Known Everywhere for the Wonderful Relief They Have Given.

If you are one of those unfortunate struggling with the pain and distress of itching, bleeding, protruding piles or hemorrhoids, ask any druggist for a 50-cent box of Pyramid Pile Suppositories. Take no substitute. Relief should come so quickly you will wonder why anyone should continue to suffer the pain of such a distressing condition.

For a free trial package, send name and address to Pyramid Drug Co., 629 Pyramid Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

CORNS

Stop their pain in one minute
—by removing the cause!

Just put on one of Dr. Schell's protective, soothing Zino-pads. So easy, yet so effective, that you can be free of pain in one minute. The only treatment of its kind.

Zino-pads are thin, antiseptic, waterproof and absolutely safe. Get a bottle today. At your druggist's or the dealer's.
Saves for corns, callouses, bunions

Dr. Schell's Zino-pads

Made in the laboratory of The Schell Mfg. Co., makers of Dr. Schell's First Aid Antiseptic, Antidysentery, etc.

BRINGING UP FATHER

SOULS for SALE

SEE JIGGS AND MAGGIE IN FULL FACE OF COLORS IN THE SUNDAY BEE

Drawn for The Omaha Bee by McManus

Dog Hill Paragrafs

Washington Hook says if the world did not have a lot of little bumps all over it for people to stumble over, no body would slow down and everybody would run over each other.

Columbus Allsup took a seat in a chair out in the yard today while it was cloudy. Right soon the sun came out hot, and he realized he was sitting out hot, and he had to get up and move. He did not seem to mind it much, though, as he says all such things come in the day's events.

Sim Plinders says he cannot enjoy company as he should, because he realizes that while he is feasting then, he will have to skimp for the next few days.

Common Sense

Do You Welcome Chances to Help Others?

If you have made a success along some line and have learned by hard knocks some of the shoals to be avoided, why not be mainly and human enough to give some other man the benefit of your knowledge and experience?

This man may not have the same stamina that you have; he may give in easier.

Advice from you might mean success to him.

Help him from you might save him from failure.

Why be so self-centered?
When you see an opportunity to do a good turn for another person, do it.
A good word from the right source means a whole lot to some man or woman.

Do you ever stop to think how little you have done, ever, in this world?
Think it over.

How many persons have you aided, in any way?
What have you done for anyone other than your wife and family, whom the law says that you should love and cherish and protect?
Mighty few deeds of this sort stand to your credit. Isn't it true?
To acknowledge it to yourself is half the battle.

Now get busy and help.

Uncle Sam Says

Homemade Fruit Butters.

Do you utilize your fruit cuts?
Fruits which are unfit for canning may be made into excellent fruit butters with but little effort. The government has issued a booklet on this subject. Get a copy. It contains many recipes for fruit butters with directions for canning them. You will doubtless have many culls during the peach and plum canning seasons which may be saved.

Readers of The Omaha Bee may obtain a copy of this booklet free by addressing a postal card to the Division of Publication, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., asking for "F. B. 909."

SOULS for SALE

By RUPERT HUGHES.

(Continued From Yesterday.)
Think what would have happened to her plan if she had been incarcerated in a person's household. The boarding house the Galbraiths had selected for her was all to near to them, as it was. They commended her to the care of the landlady and left her.
And the landlady drove Mem almost
to insanity by trying to mother the poor, lonely thing.

Mem was so beset by human kindness that she was about ready to murder her next benefactor. She longed for a bit of refreshing selfishness and indifference.

Her room had been occupied by various professors who left various
traces of themselves; one left cigar burns on the edges of all the tables and the mantel. But somebody had left a few novels. They were frightfully tempting.

There was an electric light over the head of the bed—a very nervous affair. A twist of wire turned it on, and one could lie and read till sleep drew near, then merely reach up and switch on the blessed darkness.

After a hot bath and a vigorous scrubbing of her hair Mem yielded to temptation and enjoyed all the pleasant anguish of a major sin when she lay outstretched in her night gown, with her hair spread out on her upright pillow and a romance on the desk of her knees.

Cleopatra could hardly have felt so luxurious on a golden divan covered with silk and fanned by slaves as Mem felt in that boarding house bed.
Cleopatra had perhaps never learned to read, since the Egyptians were ancient story tellers, but she could not have tasted the sweets of stolen fruit or had her delight heightened by a struggle with an overstrained conscience.

The novel that held Mem spellbound was Thomas Hardy's "Two in a Tower," that epic of two souls against a background of stars—against that starless "hole in the sky" which astronomers believed in when Hardy wrote the book.

That person's daughter began her fictional education at the top. She lost many of the signals by which direct authors indicate to sophisticated readers that things not to be mentioned are going on. But as she read and read, growing wider and wider awake and putting as if her body were running as swiftly as her mind, it gradually dawned on her what had happened to the heroine of the story; the similarity of her problem to long on the lonely tower with the young astronomer for companion and only the stars for denunciation of a most unexpected distance.

When the astronomer sailed for Australia in ignorance of the plight of the lady, Mem's heart jumped almost out of her mouth, for she realized the similarity of her problem to that of the heroine. Her own lover had sailed away to a farther port than the Antipodes, and even more irrevocably.

He checked over her foresight and called himself a stupid old dot for not thinking of it before. And his wife praised him and slept easier. She knew Mem's plan to become "Mrs.
Woodville," but she had not imagination enough to foresee the effect of this new embarrassment.

Mem had anticipated almost every other surprise but this. The main charm of Tucson was to be her anonymity there. When she heard her name called, and by a clergyman, of all people, the gentle providence of her father landed like a bombshell.
Tucson rocked under her feet and her pilot fell to pieces in her hand.

She would have to be under the eye of Dr. Galbraith, who was already promising not to let her out of his pastoral care, and warning her that his wife was waiting inside the station.

In her desperation she caught sight of Tom Holby, who had walked beki-ly to the head of the train and was striding back to his car. A frantic whim led Mem to say, very distinctly,
as she passed him:

"Good night, Mr. Woodville." Holby had already lifted his hat and made her a gift of one of his high-priced smiles before he heard what she called him. He stopped short with his hat aloft as if in a still picture. He could hardly believe his ears. He was so used to being recognized by total strangers that it stunned him to be called out of his name by this girl with whom he had been briefly cast away in the desert.

But he recovered his native modesty, laughed to himself, "This is fame!"
and went on.

The Rev. Dr. Galbraith had paused for a backward glance, but Mem urged him along, saying, "That's an old friend I met on the train." And now she felt that she had established the existence of her Mr. Woodville. She was already unconsciously "planting" characters.

"Oh!" said Dr. Galbraith. "His face looked familiar; but I guess it wasn't."
The reason it looked familiar was that it happened to be the face of all over Tucson. Holby was to appear there in a picture. If Dr. Galbraith had been more acutely observant, or had had a keener memory for faces, he would have caught Mem in the act of her lie. But he was thinking of other things.

Mem hated Mrs. Galbraith with enthusiasm until she met her, and then she found out to be not at all the preacher's wife as Mem understood the appellation, but a system memorables raised on a beach and of a loud and blustering constitution.

With western hospitality in the most despotic to the world, and sometimes taken the form of teasing and hoping to see you.

Mrs. Anne Carter
Save and Beautify
Your Hair With
Newbro's Herculicide

SOULS for SALE

By RUPERT HUGHES.

(Continued From Yesterday.)
Think what would have happened to
her plan if she had been incarcerated in
a person's household. The boarding
house the Galbraiths had selected for
her was all to near to them, as it
was. They commended her to the care of the landlady and left her.
And the landlady drove Mem almost
to insanity by trying to mother the poor,
lonely thing.

Mem was so beset by human kindness that she was about ready to
murder her next benefactor. She
longed for a bit of refreshing selfishness and indifference.

Her room had been occupied by
various professors who left various
traces of themselves; one left cigar
burns on the edges of all the tables
and the mantel. But somebody had
left a few novels. They were fright-
fully tempting.

There was an electric light over the
head of the bed—a very nervous
affair. A twist of wire turned it
on, and one could lie and read till
sleep drew near, then merely reach
up and switch on the blessed darkness.

After a hot bath and a vigorous
scrubbing of her hair Mem yielded
to temptation and enjoyed all the
pleasant anguish of a major sin when
she lay outstretched in her night
gown, with her hair spread out on
her upright pillow and a romance on
the desk of her knees.

Cleopatra could hardly have felt so
luxurious on a golden divan covered
with silk and fanned by slaves as Mem felt in that boarding house bed.
Cleopatra had perhaps never learned
to read, since the Egyptians were
ancient story tellers, but she could not
have tasted the sweets of stolen fruit
or had her delight heightened by a
struggle with an overstrained conscience.

The novel that held Mem spellbound
was Thomas Hardy's "Two in a Tower," that epic of two souls against a
background of stars—against that
starless "hole in the sky" which
astronomers believed in when Hardy
wrote the book.

That person's daughter began her
fictional education at the top. She
lost many of the signals by which
direct authors indicate to sophisti-
cated readers that things not to be
mentioned are going on. But as she
read and read, growing wider and
wider awake and putting as if her
body were running as swiftly as her
mind, it gradually dawned on her
what had happened to the heroine of
the story; the similarity of her problem to long on the lonely tower
with the young astronomer for companion and only the stars for denun-
ciation of a most unexpected distance.

When the astronomer sailed for Australia in ignorance of the plight of
the lady, Mem's heart jumped almost
out of her mouth, for she realized
the similarity of her problem to that
of the heroine. Her own lover had
sailed away to a farther port than
the Antipodes, and even more irrevocably.

He checked over her foresight and
called himself a stupid old dot for not
thinking of it before. And his wife
praised him and slept easier. She
knew Mem's plan to become "Mrs.
Woodville," but she had not imagination enough to foresee the effect of this new embarrassment.

Mem had anticipated almost every
other surprise but this. The main
charm of Tucson was to be her an-
onymity there. When she heard her
name called, and by a clergyman, of
all people, the gentle providence of
her father landed like a bombshell.
Tucson rocked under her feet and her
pilot fell to pieces in her hand.

She would have to be under the eye
of Dr. Galbraith, who was already
promising not to let her out of his
pastoral care, and warning her that
his wife was waiting inside the station.

In her desperation she caught sight
of Tom Holby, who had walked beki-
ly to the head of the train and was
striding back to his car. A frantic
whim led Mem to say, very distinctly,
as she passed him:

"Good night, Mr. Woodville." Holby had already lifted his hat and
made her a gift of one of his high-
priced smiles before he heard what she
called him. He stopped short with his
hat aloft as if in a still picture. He
could hardly believe his ears. He was
so used to being recognized by total
strangers that it stunned him to be called out of his name by this girl
with whom he had been briefly cast
away in the desert.

But he recovered his native modesty,
laughed to himself, "This is fame!"
and went on.

The Rev. Dr. Galbraith had paused
for a backward glance, but Mem urged him along, saying, "That's an old friend I met on the train." And now
she felt that she had established the existence of her Mr. Woodville. She
was already unconsciously "planting"
characters.

"Oh!" said Dr. Galbraith. "His face looked familiar; but I guess it wasn't."
The reason it looked familiar was
that it happened to be the face of
all over Tucson. Holby was to appear
there in a picture. If Dr. Galbraith
had been more acutely observant, or
had had a keener memory for faces,
he would have caught Mem in the act
of her lie. But he was thinking of other things.

Mem hated Mrs. Galbraith with enthusiasm until she met her, and then
she found out to be not at all the
preacher's wife as Mem understood
the appellation, but a system memora-
bles raised on a beach and of a loud and blustering constitution.

With western hospitality in the most
despotic to the world, and sometimes
taken the form of teasing and hoping to see you.

Mrs. Anne Carter
Save and Beautify
Your Hair With
Newbro's Herculicide

SOULS for SALE

By RUPERT HUGHES.

(Continued From Yesterday.)
Think what would have happened to
her plan if she had been incarcerated in
a person's household. The boarding
house the Galbraiths had selected for
her was all to near to them, as it
was. They commended her to the care of the landlady and left her.
And the landlady drove Mem almost
to insanity by trying to mother the poor,
lonely thing.

Mem was so beset by human kindness that she was about ready to
murder her next benefactor. She
longed for a bit of refreshing selfishness and indifference.

Her room had been occupied by
various professors who left various
traces of themselves; one left cigar
burns on the edges of all the tables
and the mantel. But somebody had
left a few novels. They were fright-
fully tempting.

There was an electric light over the
head of the bed—a very nervous
affair. A twist of wire turned it
on, and one could lie and read till
sleep drew near, then merely reach
up and switch on the blessed darkness.

After a hot bath and a vigorous
scrubbing of her hair Mem yielded
to temptation and enjoyed all the
pleasant anguish of a major sin when
she lay outstretched in her night
gown, with her hair spread out on
her upright pillow and a romance on
the desk of her knees.

Cleopatra could hardly have felt so
luxurious on a golden divan covered
with silk and fanned by slaves as Mem felt in that boarding house bed.
Cleopatra had perhaps never learned
to read, since the Egyptians were
ancient story tellers, but she could not
have tasted the sweets of stolen fruit
or had her delight heightened by a struggle with an overstrained conscience.

The novel that held Mem spellbound
was Thomas Hardy's "Two in a Tower," that epic of two souls against a
background of stars—against that
starless "hole in the sky" which
astronomers believed in when Hardy
wrote the book.

That person's daughter began her
fictional education at the top. She
lost many of the signals by which
direct authors indicate to sophisti-
cated readers that things not to be
mentioned are going on. But as she
read and read, growing wider and
wider awake and putting as if her
body were running as swiftly as her
mind, it gradually dawned on her
what had happened to the heroine of
the story; the similarity of her problem to long on the lonely tower
with the young astronomer for companion and only the stars for denunciation of a most unexpected distance.

When the astronomer sailed for Australia in ignorance of the plight of
the lady, Mem's heart jumped almost
out of her mouth, for she realized
the similarity of her problem to that
of the heroine. Her own lover had
sailed away to a farther port than
the Antipodes, and even more irrevocably.

He checked over her foresight and
called himself a stupid old dot for not
thinking of it before. And his wife
praised him and slept easier. She
knew Mem's plan to become "Mrs.
Woodville," but she had not imagination enough to foresee the effect of this new embarrassment.

Mem had anticipated almost every
other surprise but this. The main
charm of Tucson was to be her an-
onymity there. When she heard her
name called, and by a clergyman, of
all people, the gentle providence of
her father landed like a bombshell.
Tucson rocked under her feet and her
pilot fell to pieces in her hand.

She would have to be under the eye
of Dr. Galbraith, who was already
promising not to let her out of his
pastoral care, and warning her that
his wife was waiting inside the station.

In her desperation she caught sight
of Tom Holby, who had walked beki-
ly to the head of the train and was
striding back to his car. A frantic
whim led Mem to say, very distinctly,
as she passed him:

"Good night, Mr. Woodville." Holby had already lifted his hat and
made her a gift of one of his high-
priced smiles before he heard what she
called him. He stopped short with his
hat aloft as if in a still picture. He
could hardly believe his ears. He was
so used to being recognized by total
strangers that it stunned him to be called out of his name by this girl
with whom he had been briefly cast
away in the desert.

But he recovered his native modesty,
laughed to himself, "This is fame!"
and went on.

The Rev. Dr. Galbraith had paused
for a backward glance, but Mem urged him along, saying, "That's an old friend I met on the train." And now
she felt that she had established the existence of her Mr. Woodville. She
was already unconsciously "planting"
characters.

"Oh!" said Dr. Galbraith. "His face looked familiar; but I guess it wasn't."
The reason it looked familiar was
that it happened to be the face of
all over Tucson. Holby was to appear
there in a picture. If Dr. Galbraith
had been more acutely observant, or
had had a keener memory for faces,
he would have caught Mem in the act
of her lie. But he was thinking of other things.

Mem hated Mrs. Galbraith with enthusiasm until she met her, and then
she found out to be not at all the
preacher's wife as Mem understood
the appellation, but a system memora-
bles raised on a beach and of a loud and blustering constitution.

With western hospitality in the most
despotic to the world, and sometimes
taken the form of teasing and hoping to see you.

Mrs. Anne Carter
Save and Beautify
Your Hair With
Newbro's Herculicide

Bryan Reopens Municipal Coal Yard in Capital City Lincoln, Oct. 2.—City Commissioner C. W. Bryan today opened the second season of the Lincoln municipal coal yard with a large supply on hand. The price of coal, as received from Illinois mines, has been set by the city at $11 a ton, which exceeds the 1921 municipal coal yard price by 40 cents a ton. The increase, according to Mr. Bryan, is due to increased cost of the product at the mines.

No decision has been made as yet to sell semi-anthracite or hard coal.

A Beautiful
Complexion & Admiration Ladies—A few days' treatment with CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS will do more to clean up the skin than all the beauty treatments in creation. An imperfect complexion is caused by a sluggish liver.
Millions of people, old, young and middle aged, take them for biliousness, Dizziness, Headache, Upright Stomach and for Sallow, Faded and Livery Skin. They eat the mineral of Constitution.
Small Pill—Small Dose—Small Price

Big Drug and Toilet Goods Sale at the 5 SHERMAN & MCCONNELL
DRUG STORES
Continues Through Tuesday and Wednesday

Bring the Family to See the Telephone Girls at Work There are few more interesting sights than "behind the scenes" in a telephone central office.
You will marvel at the genius of the men who have developed and perfected modern telephony. The means by which voices of subscribers, possibly miles away in all directions, can reach other subscribers unerringly through the maze of copper wire, is truly wonderful.
You will be fascinated by the intricate mechanism of the switchboard, and by the swift-moving fingers of the operators.
You will want to see these intelligent and courteous young women who are tirelessly and patiently serving you and other subscribers.
Mother and the children will be just as much interested in the wonderful mechanism at the telephone central office as you. Why not bring them and make us a visit?
NORTHWESTERN
BELL TELEPHONE
COMPANY

There is blessed relief in each jar of Resinol
Only those who have tried it can realize the comfort that Resinol Ointment brings to sufferers from skin trouble. Even in severe, well-established cases of eczema or other itching disorders it promptly allays the irritation and hastens the healing.
It is easy to apply—has no unpleasant odor—and makes a most reliable treatment for corns, bunions, chafing, etc.
Sold in two sizes by all druggists.

Save and Beautify
Your Hair With
Newbro's Herculicide
Herculicide is best for the hair because of its positive action in beautifying the hair, removing dandruff, itching, itching, itching.
After an application of Herculicide the high lights of your hair begin to show and your scalp begins to lose its oil and become healthy. In a few days your hair will be completely transformed.
You will have the beautiful hair you have always desired. Your scalp will be healthy and dandruff will be completely removed. Your appearance will be greatly improved.
Newbro's Herculicide
Removes Dandruff - Stops Falling Hair Read what Mrs. Anna Carter (quoted best case of Newbro's Herculicide): "I use Newbro's Herculicide daily. It is a wonderful preparation for the hair and scalp.
My hair has become the finest." What Herculicide has done for Mrs. Carter will be done for you. You will see the benefit of the use of Herculicide. You will see the difference in your hair. You will see the difference in your scalp. You will see the difference in your appearance. You will see the difference in your life.
Sold By All Drug and Dept. Stores Applications At Barber Shops
Sherman & McConnell, Special Agent

Bowen's
THE VALUE GIVING STORE
USED
Grafonolas
$49.75
$59.75
$64.50
All the Lates
COLUMBIA RECORDS
Your Terms Are Our Terms USED SEWING MACHINES
"New" $2.50
"Best" $12.50
"Standard" $18.50
"New Home" $19.50
"Goodrich" $19.50
New Super Ederage, $28.50
A.R. Bowen Co.
THE VALUE-GIVING STORE
Neward St., Des Moines, Iowa