

Giants Trim Yankees in Another World Series Game by Score of 4 to 3

Hugh McQuillan Goes Route for McGraw's Team

Americans Hit Hard Enough to Win Dozen Games, but Throw Away Most of Results.

By HUGH FULLERTON. Omaha Bee Local Wire. New York, Oct. 7.—New York's Yankees threw away a ball game, threw away their chances of the series and, in one of the worst exhibitions of baseball in the history of a world series, were three down at the end of a wretched day of play, the Giants winning, 4 to 3.

Playing in a rain varying from a drizzle to a downpour, the rushing Giants simply rumped off with the ball, a clear present. The Giants didn't win—the Yankees lost. They lost even the friends they had, and the fact that both was against them counts little against the fact that their own home-headed, lagging style of baseball prevented them from winning in spite of the luck.

Poor Exhibition. They gave the worst exhibition of base running of taking advantage of opportunities ever seen on a ball field. In spite of that, they made three runs. The Giants deserved nothing, but they got four runs in an inning which was all luck. A lucky hit, which bounced, jumped and hurtled five feet over World's head, and a slow boundary, which hit home another run, gave them four almost undeserved runs.

The Yankees, meantime, threw away at least six runs by sheer foolishness on the bases. In the first inning they got just two runs off four hits, a double, and a smash which ordinarily would have been a home run. But the star exhibition of home and foolishness was given by Bob Meusel in the seventh when, instead of running out a hit toward short, he loosed and was out, in spite of the fact that the ball was thrown wild. He was out by a home run, and followed by a home run, which would have tied the ball game.

Should Have Won. The Yankees ought to have won this game by a score of at least 7 to 4, even allowing that the Giants would have had the luck they did have. Had they been trying to throw the game they would have done better. Even the elements were against the American leaguers. They opened against Hugh McQuillan as if to annihilate him and slammed the ball all over the lot in the first inning, then subsided suddenly and tried to hurry play. They were afraid that the rain which poured then subsided then poured again, would rob them of the victory which they already had accounted as won.

It is probable that they would have won but for the rain, and even that scored against them, for it appeared to slacken when the Giants were on the defensive and pour when the Yankees were in the field. It was pouring hardest during that inning in which, aided by uncanny luck, McGraw's men scored the four runs which assured them the game and probably the series.

Blame Coaches. The Yankees may cry luck—and luck—but there is no luck when a runner is thrown away by sheer stupidity. Bob Meusel, because his was the most glaring case probably, will be selected as the goat, but the coaches sent to fewer than the Yankees to death, and in the ninth inning when they were assaulting McQuillan and seemed certain of victory, with one run practically certain, they sent on to hopeless death on the bases, without rhyme or reason.

On baseball sense, generalship and brains, the Giants deserve the series. The Yankees hit hard enough today to win a dozen ball games—and throw away most of the results. Mays, deserving a shutout victory, registered a defeat. McQuillan, hit viciously in three innings and escaping in some others because the Yankees thought they had it won and were trying to beat the rain, joins the heroes.

It looks as if the dope was all wrong. The element of brains and baseball sense cannot be denied. Today the dope as to hitting, fielding, pitching, was all right, but the battle was the finest proof that mind trumps over matter we have seen in a long time.
