Noted Author Has Life of Varied Experience

Kathleen Norris, whose new story, "Certain People of Importance," has just been published, has had a life of somewhat varied experience and fortune. One of six children who lived a jolly, carefree existence with a forest for a playground and dogs, horses, cats and chickens for playmates, Kathleen grew up at "Trechaven," her father's home in Mill Valley, Cal., sheltered from the wind and fog at the foot of Mount Tamalpais. But her first taste of adversity came early. At 19 when debutante Kathleen was planning her party gowns for a first winter in San Francisco, her mother was stricken with pneumonia and in less than a month her death was followed by that of the father. Financial reverses left the six orphans destitute, but gallant hearted Kathleen found a position in a hardware store at 130 a month, her brother and younger sister as the total of the family's income to $80 and they always managed to keep ahead of their one terror, debt. Each night, Mrs. Norris and her sister returned from the office to the task of getting dinner for the hungry children, of making beds, washing dishes and scrubbing floors, but the little family clung together bravely and managed to snatch many moments of fun. A few years later Mrs. Norris married Charles Norris, the younger brother of the author of the "Detachment" and "The Pit," now himself a well known novelist. Life in a little flat on the income of a young school editor was not luxurious, but it was

The Really Clean Home

By LORETTA C. LYNCH. Too many homes are the health enemies of those who live in them. In other words, while they may be beautifully furnished, they are not really clean. Take, for instance, the bathrooms. The toilet may be a menace to health if it is unclean. For a hard to clean discolored toilet bowl try this: It is a very agreeable job, but it is a necessary one, this collar cleaning. A commercial disinfectant should be in every home. It should be used freely in a cellar that has been cleaned up. Once a week at least a little disinfectant should be poured into sinks, washubs and other drains. Another source of danger to health may be found in the garbage can. In the really clean home the garbage can is sterilized at least once a week. To effect this, the can is filled about three-fourths full of water to which is added a lump of soda. The can is covered and set to boil for 15 minutes. Both inside and outside should be scrubbed with a brush kept for the purpose and soap. It should be rinsed and dried with paper. The can should be paper-lined before using. Light, air and direct sun rays are nature's aids to cleanliness. Think it over—is your home really clean?
