

THE OMAHA SUNDAY BEE

OCTOBER 22
1922

Student carpenters at work. The purpose of the Bellevue school is twofold, according to Director Mace. His plan is to find out through various tryouts, the vocation for which each of his war veteran students is best fitted and then find a job for him in that vocation. In case it is found the veteran's war service and injuries have unfit him for steady work, Director Mace recommends permanent government compensation.

—Dewell Photo

Bellevue
Vocational School

This main building of the school houses, classrooms and administrative offices

—Dewell Photo

The school is completely equipped for training in many branches. Here is a class in watchmaking and engraving.

—Bihler Photo

Members of the Bellevue class in horticulture. There is a heavy enrollment in all branches of agriculture at the Bellevue school.

—Dewell Photo

B. M. Mace, Jr., is director of the Bellevue Vocational school.

A little frolic with the chickens. Thorough instruction in poultry judging is one of the subjects taught war vets at Bellevue.

—Dewell Photo

Future tailors getting practice in measuring the "victim." —Bihler Photo

Civil engineering is one of the popular Bellevue courses.

A class in typewriting in the commercial department. In addition to the present courses offered, it is planned to add soon instruction in printing and photography.

—Dewell Photo

Making new ones out of old ones in the school's shoe repair shop.

Bellevue produces its own advertising signs. The class in sign painting makes 'em.

—Dewell Photo

These men are in training to become expert wood workers and cabinet makers.

In the Bellevue machine shop.