Suppose you try this for a while: Stop wondering why people don't like you. And start looking around for people to like. Maybe there is some one in need, or as shy as you, or lonely or awkward to whom you can be a regular fairy godmother friendces, left Tuesday for New York to at in-need.

Remember that everyone is lonely and that most people are longing for friendship just as avidly and eagerly as you are. And proceed to endow a few people with the riches of your pentup friendship.

Find out what folks are interested in. Don't try to exploit your own interests or to prove your own charms. But just devote yourself to giving a few other folks a chance to express their pentup loneliness.

Be nice to lonely old folks and to children. They are bound to respond to friendliness. Practice giv. ing to them the comradely under standing and kindness for which they long-and so often in vain. Give out love and friendship. And don't watch to see if it is coming back to you. Pretty soon you'll be an expert in
