LAWYER, PREACHER, PHILOSOPHER.

Lyman Abbott's active life spanned a period of world activity that in all ways, intellectual or material, cultural or industrial, outshone any similar number of years in the history of the world.

What share did Lyman Abbott have in this work? He was first a student, then a lawyer, then a minister of the gospel, and finally a great editor and philosopher.

His work was not that of a doer, nor did he assume the austerity of a seer; his interest in the affairs of men was healthy and active, his opinion reasoned but not dogmatic.

Our line of thinkers is continuous, just as is the race of creators, so that the passing of one does not denote an end to thought or advance.

SHALL THE CLOCK BE SILENCED? Is the tickless clock, exhibited by a German engineer at Berlin, a "hoon to humanity," as described by the correspondent who forwards the news to America?

What about the uneasy sleeper who lulls himself to slumber by trying to fit words to the monotonous "tick, tick," that records the passage of the weary hours, or the impatient schoolboy, who notes the slow drag of the last five minutes by the same steady note?

FRANKLIN K. LANE'S LETTERS. Franklin Knight Lane was the one really constructive element in either of President Wilson's cabinets.

His letters, just published by his wife, are the most valuable of any of the contributions to history from members of the Wilson cabinets.

Some interesting glimpses behind the scenes are afforded by the letters, yet in no disclosure made is there any trace of acrimony.

the existence of which was not known to any of the others! The human side of Mr. Lane is exhibited in the many intimate disclosures contained in letters to friends and relatives.

STUDYING NEBRASKA IN THE SCHOOLS.

The ignorance of Nebraskans upon the subject of Nebraska is really appalling. While it is true that the history of Nebraska is being taught in a desultory way, it is equally true that not enough emphasis is placed upon that study, nor is the text book provided sufficient.

Every school child in Nebraska should be taught to the fullest possible extent the glorious history of this commonwealth and the wonderful possibilities it possesses.

It produces more agricultural wealth per capita than any other state. Its per capita of farm wealth exceeds that of any other state.

REVIVAL OF 'PUDD'N'HEAD WILSON.'

Omaha is a long way from Broadway, but a radio wave may travel the distance; it is even possible that suggestion from Omaha may have some weight among the powers that be in the world of the theater down there.

Many so-called modern plays have proved failures or at best short-lived successes. Their appeal has not been such as to meet the call of the public's restless mood.

'Pudd'n'head Wilson' is one in mind. It was shown in Omaha by Frank Mayo and a splendid company a quarter of a century ago; it practically dropped out when Mayo died, but it might well be revived now.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLE.

A few evenings ago we listened to a speaker who ably addressed us on present world conditions. He stated, and we think his statement is accepted by all thinking people, that the only remedy for the ills of society is Love as taught nineteen hundred years ago by the Man of Galilee.

Since we know that Love is the only remedy, why do we withhold it from the suffering patient; why not hasten to administer it generously that health may come flooding back to the weakened body and feebly beating heart? Why do we hesitate?

Because with this remedy, as is often the case with remedies in the medical world, there is a principle therein that we shrink from swallowing because it is unpleasant to the taste.

Life is a "give and take" proposition; it is made up of many sacrifices of desires and ambitions, and as individuals and nations we must learn to contribute our share of Self-Denial before we are entitled to partake of the contribution of others.

We thought the weather man had exhausted his stock of turrid zone climate last summer, but he seems to have had some odds and ends left over.

One thing noteworthy in regard to the Congressional Record is that it keeps pretty close track of what the members of congress are doing.

A New Romance by Basil King Hero Marries for Spite in "The Dust Flower."

It is not so much what we do, but how we do it, that counts; and that holds good in the writing of a book, as it does in any kitchen.

If you approach "The Dust Flower" with an intention to measure it by some literary standards, you are advised to abandon that idea.

"The Dust Flower" is a novel of the most charming style. He selects interesting characters, builds up extravagant situations, and he has the subtle art of concealing his authorship.

Without having beauty, Miss Barbara Wabrook impressed upon us something of the intellectual and the artistic by the most expensive houses in New York.

"If you marry me, Barbara, you'll have to take me as I am, disgusting habits and all," he retorts, aggressively.

Do you know anything about it? "Would you marry a man who didn't have married anyone—as yet?"

Consider the facts, that's a great deal in the way of presumption, isn't it? "If it's so much presumption as all that," he demanded, "what's the meaning of that ring?"

"Oh, I don't have to go on wearing it." Crossing the room, she pulled it off and held it out toward him.

"We are told that the ring fell to the floor, and he called her an old maid, which she readily admitted. He refused to retrieve the ring, and she left him with his chief in the devil," literally, and that she would have it upon her head.

"Seeing with her own eyes to what she had driven him, her heart went out to him, and she asked for the wedding of her heart. It would be a mad thing for him to punish himself so terribly for a woman who would marry him, he wouldn't pick and choose; he would take them as they come."

"She was a red-faced woman, crowned with a bonnet introduced by Mrs. Langtry in 1870, but worn on this occasion with some degree of off center. On her arm she carried a basket of which the contents, densely covered with a towel, might have been freshly laundered."

"Madam, I wish to ask if you'll marry me?" "Even a dull brain couldn't fail to catch the words hammered out with this force of precision. The woman didn't wait to have them repeated. Dropping her basket as it was, she flew to flight."

"I don't want you to get me wrong," he explained. "It's not a question of my marrying you in particular. I've said I marry the woman I wish to marry. I'm not looking for a wife. I only want a woman to marry—a woman to whom I can point and say: See there! I've married—what? It'll mean no more to you than a part they'd give you in pictures—just a role—and pay you a lot better. You'd have been freshly laundered."

ished at his bedside, when he passed on during the night of May 17, 1921. In her preface, Mrs. Lane tells of her husband's letter-writing habits.

"His letters are peculiarly autobiographical, for whenever his active mind was engaged on some problem, his thoughts turned naturally to that friend with whom he would most like to discuss the subject, and if he could possibly make the time, to him he wrote just what thoughts raced through his mind."

"These letters will be of value to the future as well as to the present, for they disclose not only the manner of man Franklin K. Lane was, but throw some bright beams on the man with whom he moved and worked."

"LIFE AND LETTERS OF FRANKLIN K. LANE" compiled and edited by Anne Whitman. Price, $2.00. D. J. Lippincott Company.

A volume of nearly 500 pages, made of letters that are in a full sense autobiographical, for they contain the frank expressions of the writer, who has no secret of intention.

"We have had to push, and push, and push, to get him to take any forward step," Mr. Lane wrote to his brother after the cabinet meeting on February 20, 1917.

Generally the war period is dealt with in similarly open fashion, for the secretary was writing to those he could trust and to whom he could open his heart.

AROUND NEBRASKA

Friend Telegraph: Don't aim too high if you want to reduce taxes. See that your school, city and county boards reduce expenses and lower taxes. Do this, and state taxes will automatically come down.

Pierce County Call: The daylight saviors should have thermometers registering 19 degrees lower, so they would be cooler.

Sidney Enterprise: Women and Indians bare their chests, wear beads, but feathers in their hair and paint their faces, but the Indian refuses to wear galoshes.

Gottingburg Independent: It used to be a game of seven-up with a bottle of Scotch on the side. But now it is bridge with sour potatoes and nut loaf on the side, middle and both ends.

Beatrice Express: A Crab Orchard farmer has named a cow America, because she has gone dry.

Grand Island Independent: Eastern newspaper correspondents have saved us again. We of Nebraska have now quit burning corn!

Aurora Republican: While talking to a farmer the other day he raised the question of why the city of Aurora and the incorporated towns would not be permitted to vote on the question of Sunday baseball in the county outside of the towns, when the farmers would not be permitted to vote if the question came up inside the corporate limits of the towns.

Blue Valley Blade, Seward: Close your mufflers—Charlie Bryan's little litty boom for governor is dying! Charlie Bryan has as much chance of being elected governor as we have of securing a supply of Pennsylvania anthracite—no chance!

Always on the Job. Hewitt—The devil never takes a vacation. Jewett—And Cupid always wears his working clothes—Columbus State.

Scotts Register: Nebraskans have a right to be proud of the fact that their state does not owe a penny of bonded debt. It was a wise precaution on the part of the men who wrote the state constitution.

Norfolk News: A California man says he can take the "kick" out of wine by magic. His next problem is to find someone who wants the "kick" taken out of his wine.

Seward Blade: The democrats pretend to oppose the code—but they don't—they do oppose a republican state administration. If Brother Charley is elected governor notice how the democratic politicians will hustle for the code jobs. They misrepresent him, but can not fool the voter, who knows that $2,000,000 for which we are taxed is for soldiers' relief, $2,000,000 of the $5,000,000 to build a new capitol is already paid, and the millions for highways have been well spent. State taxes are now one-third less than two years ago. It's your school tax that boosts your tax.

There is an aristocracy of musical culture, just as there is an aristocracy of birth and of breeding.

Mason & Hamlin pianos are created for the musical aristocrat who demands resonance and tone of supreme beauty and longevity.

So completely is this ideal attained that Melba says: "Preference for the Mason & Hamlin is indicative of a superior musical nature."
