TOTICE the great difference between the flour at the right-the flour used in WHEAT TONE-and the flour used in ordingry whole-wheat breads. Ordinary "whole-wheat" flour is usually a combination of white flour and bran, while WHEAT TONE is the whole grain, properly milled, including the germ.

Because we grind this flour at a mill installed at our bakery, grinding under the same old stone method used by our forefathers, we can use all of the wheat berry, including the germ.

Scientists tell us this germ is high In vitamins, a property essential to health. This germ is removed from commercial flours, because it does not permit shipping long distances or storing, but because we grind the flour for WHEAT TONE each day we can include this highly beneficial element.

WHEAT TONE is a natural sody builder and regulator. It is tighly nourishing, yet contains the lements necessary to keep the body unctioning properly.

WHEAT TONE has a place in our diet. Serve it at every meal. After you have eaten WHE T TONE, its difference from other health breads will be apparent. Your grocer can supply you, but, be sure you get WHEAT TONE.
