Write Her Again.

Dear Miss Fairfax: While visiting a married sister who lives in a small town I was introduced to a young lady, who entertained me the few days I was there. I felt like her, as I noticed she felt the same way toward me.

I was unable to make any appointment with her when I left, but wrote her immediately upon my return home, to which I received no answer. What steps would you advise me to take? Would it be proper for me to visit her home town again? M. J.

Possibly the girl thought your note required no answer and that it was just a formal one to thank her for the courtesy she showed you while you were visiting in her home town. Either write her again and ask her if she won't bridge over the absence by continuing the friendship in a correspondence, or go to see your sister again and so make the girl realize that you really are interested in her and that it was not just environment and circumstance which threw you together.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Which of the Two?

Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been going out with a young man for one year. He often impressed on my mind that we were to be just friends. Two months ago I decided I would make the acquaintance of other boys and girls in my community.

Pride Versus Love.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I'm 19 and love a chap one year my senior. About seven months ago this chap informed friends of mine that he cared for me and that he would like to meet me.

Puzzled.

You cannot really admire a man who has shown that he cares for you and does not care to work. Life is to the strong and every woman respects the man who is ready to do his share of the world's work.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES FATTY COON MORE OF HIS ADVENTURES

Fatty Coon was always pleased when spring came and the birds began to nest. It was not, however, that Fatty looked forward with pleasure to hearing the young birds chirping and calling for food.

Henrietta Hen started. She looked at Fatty and he looked at her and she spoke. "Good morning, Miss Henrietta!"

telegrams which I had crumpled and hung to the floor. I crossed the hall to my own room, and spread the crumpled sheets out again, noting the outside directions Dicky had given for the bureau he wished me to make.

One part of my brain was in hot rebellion, the other was coolly, mechanically estimating the task which lay before me. I decided to grant Dicky's request. I took a local timetable from my desk and compared it methodically with the directions my husband had sent me.

I spoke the words aloud over and over again, but soon as I said them I found myself coming swiftly from close to dresser drawers, and putting into a bag the things I would need for a short stay in strange places. It was as if something outside my volition was driving me to a course of conduct which I neither desired nor approved.

Lillian's footsteps outside the door brought my activities to a sudden stop. I thrust the bag behind the bed, closed the dresser, and as she came in I faced her, feeling much as might a child already beaten thoroughly, who sees another whipping in sight.
