Wins Press Club Short Story Prize

Prizes in the Omaha Women's Press club contests were announced Wednesday at the club's annual dinner at the Brandeis restaurants.

Mrs. Helen Genevieve Masters, wife of Principal J. G. Masters of Omaha Central high school, won the prize of $40 for the best short story, the title being, "Nancy Gault, a Study in Drama." Stanley R. Osgurn of Blair won honorable mention with "The One White Drop."

The $30 prize for the best piece of drama was won by Mrs. Magdalene Craft Radke of Tecumseh, with J. M. Watt, 807 North Forty-first avenue, Omaha, second.

In the poetry class, Mrs. Carolyn Renfrew of Hastings won the first prize of $20 with "Hope." Arthur W. Stevens of Kearney was second with "A Nebraska Sunset."

H. Howard Biggar, 415 North Thirtieth street, of the South Omaha Stockmen's Drovers-Journal, won the first $20 prize in the miscellaneous prose contest with a story of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debate. Mr. Biggar is the man who won first prize in the editorial contest conducted by The Omaha Bee in cooperation with The Nebraska State Press association last year. Mrs. Anna Brownell Dunaway, 4702 Wakely street, Omaha, was second in this class.

Following the announcement of prizes, Miss Eva Mahoney was installed as president of the club, succeeding Mrs. Hope Rutledge.

Program number one was given by Miss Virginia Upham, Omaha girl, who is appearing in a dance act at the Orpheum this week; Wallace Adams in female impersonations and the Kenzo quartet composed of Clare Young, Floyd Paynter, Gene Maxwell and Paul Jordan.

Bess Furman read an original story on Omaha newspapers and their personnel. Short talks were made by Contest Judges Victor Smith, Roland Jones, Neal Jones, William E. Byrne and Charles Docherty. Keene Abbott was the sixth judge. Joy Sutphen also spoke briefly.

Chl. T. W. McCullough, who this year completes 50 years in one branch or another of the newspaper business, described the influence of women in the newspaper field. Paying high tribute to women who have been engaged in local staffs in the past, Col. McCullough declared that women have measured up to the responsibilities of the profession.

SLEEPY-TIME TALES

JIMMY RABBIT ONCE MORE

BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

CHAPTER XVI. Miss Belinda Bunny Makes Herself Beautiful.

Miss Belinda Bunny certainly didn't need to prink. As her mother was forever boasting, she was the handsomest young Rabbit lady in all Pleasant Valley. And if you don't believe it you would better ask Jimmy Rabbit about that. He would tell you what he thought.

As for Belinda herself, she was never satisfied with her own looks. Somehow the stylish clothes that her mother made for her never quite suited her. Privately she thought that her mother was about a dozen years behind the times, where questions of fashion were concerned.

Poor Mrs. Bunny! She found it quite discouraging, trying to please her daughter. No matter how much time Mrs. Bunny spent, making over her old clothes for Belinda, that young person always demanded a trick here or a ruffle there, a bow in this place or a furberlow in that, where Mrs. Bunny had left a gown quite plain and severe.

And as if that wasn't enough—and too much—Belinda Bunny began at last to tell her mother she must have some powder for her face.

"Sakes alive!" cried Mrs. Bunny, the first time Belinda mentioned powder to her. "What are we coming to?"

"Now, ma!" said Miss Bunny. "All the girls—"

"I won't hear another word," said Mrs. Bunny severely. "What would your grandma think if she came here a-visiting and found that I let you daub powder on your face?"

Belinda did not answer this question. Instead she began to pout, which was a little way she had of telling her mother, without words, that she knew what was best for her, and that she meant to have it, too. She had discovered that it was safer to express her thoughts in that fashion, rather than say them right out. Probably nobody else ever learned that little trick.

Well, the days passed. And Mrs. Bunny had not forgotten the matter of powder, when Belinda came home one evening with a very good look on her face. Her mother noticed it at once. And she knew that there must be some reason for it.

"Now, Belinda Bunny!" she exclaimed. "What have you been doing to your skin?"

"Nothing, ma!" Belinda answered. "Her mother gave her a searching glance.

"What's that on your face?" she demanded. "Come here to me. Bend your head over." She seized her daughter and dragged her to the light.

"There's a queer, white ring around your face," Mrs. Bunny declared after she had taken a good look at her daughter. "I can't think what it can be."

And then she remembered what had been said about powder, a week or two before.

My Marriage Problems

How Madly Managed Harry Underwood and Claire Foster.

I held out my hand to Mrs. Barker with a warm little glow at my heart such as I never had expected to have for that doughty lady.

Her advice not to waste any more time in getting away from the house was highly sound. I wanted to put as much space as possible between myself and the error of my ways, the release of the irate physician whom Mrs. Barker had shut into her root cellar when he stormed through the house in search of Dickster.

"I won't say 'thank you' again," I said heartily, "but I can never forget your kindness."

still running, for its angry owner had not stopped even to turn his switch key when he had caught sight of me.

"Mrs. Barker is attending to Dr. Pettit," I answered with the grim reflection that this particular statement was absolutely truthful.

"And she has promised to keep his attention engaged while we slip past. We shall stop in front of the house only an instant to pick up the old man who asked to join us."

"Won't he follow us?" she breathed.

"Mrs. Barker will make him believe we went to Caldera," I returned. "Here we are now."

A Plausible Story.

"Oh, he must have gone away!" she cried, as Brother Bill stopped his car where Harry Underwood—an impressive picture in his rather fantastic trappings—stood waiting for us. "See his car is gone."

A startled glance showed me that where to be seen. For a bewildered minute I wondered if he had succeeded in breaking his way out of the root cellar. But when Mr. Underwood had mounted to the seat beside the driver, he turned with a flourish and addressed me.

"I have a message for you, madam," he said. "The gentleman who arrived in so great a hurry just now, you remember—"

"Yes," I assured, mechanically, as he paused.

"He went away again," Mr. Underwood went on, "and he asked me to say to you that he was desolated not to be able to stay and see you before he left. But he was in so great a hurry."

It was so plausible that for an instant I almost believed him. And then I realized from the very strangeness of his tone that he himself must have run the physician's car around the house in order to give color to the tale he had just told for Claire Foster's benefit.
