

Gameness Greatest Asset Fighter Can Have---"Spider" Kelly Best Illustration of Ring "Grit"

The question of the gameness of certain great professional fighters has come up recently.

It has been said to meet Jack Dempsey for the championship the man who will be given a chance to fight him must, above all things, have gameness.

When it comes to arranging a fight for the world's heavyweight championship the moving picture profits come into the calculations.

A short fight, or rather a fight of a round or two, like that between Dempsey and Fulton, or that between Dempsey and Willard, which ends before it is fairly started, is worth nothing from a moving picture standpoint.

It has been said that before the start of the Dempsey-Carpenter fight one of the promoters of the battle went to Dempsey and said:

"I don't want you to pull anything like that, but remember the crowd here is worthy of a run for its money, and then, too, the moving picture profits won't be worth a dollar unless the fight lasts at least four rounds."

There are some who say the fight who believe that Dempsey stalled and never tried his best until that fourth round.

It was noised around the arena while Dempsey and Carpenter were fighting that Dempsey had promised to give the picture men "the office" just before he landed the knockout blow.

Just before the commencement of the fourth round Dempsey scratched his feet violently in the sand box—first it was the left and then the right foot.

As he made that up to that time unusual motion, the motion picture men became unusually alert and busy, and a second later came the knockout.

When the outsiders claimed afterward that Dempsey had given the signal with his feet in the fourth round, Jack replied that nothing of the sort had happened, and said:

"I tried hard to put Carpenter out before the third round. I had my money bet that way."

But to return to gameness in the ring.

No man lacking it or lacking power will be given a chance against Dempsey, say those on the inside.

This, of course, means that Fulton and Willard, both of whom were really beaten in the first round, are especially barred.

On the other hand, men like Bill Brennan, who has gone a good part of the route with Dempsey; Tom Gibbons, who has never yet been beaten; Bartley Madden, who has proved himself a game and rugged fighter; Harry Greb, who at one time was Dempsey's sparring partner and who gave Jack as good a as was sent, have all proved their gameness and lasting power, and any one of them is entitled to a crack at the champion.

That any one of them will make him step four or more rounds, the orthodox number needed for the fight for the championship is to be a financial success, goes without saying.

Pugilists can stand so much and no more, and it is their business to deliver and take punishment. They realize this, and generally realize it, too, before really entering the business. Some of them are high strung and nervous, and little things prey on their minds, and some of them by nature love peace. And you when they enter the ring they nearly all of them forget all this and fight with all the courage at their command. Many of them have been tried in the big war, and they have one and all proved themselves true and loyal soldiers.

We do not accuse either Fulton or Willard of lack of gameness, but we do say they have had their chance against Dempsey and have no further right to ask the patrons of the game for further indulgence in that direction.

This thing of questioning a fighter's gameness, something we have never done, or to accuse one of being a quitter, is to stir up strife, no matter how much of a card at heart a man may be.

A pugilist is always very sensitive on this point, no matter how shady his reputation or how often before he has been charged with that sort of thing.

And if you intimate anything of that sort, he will go far to show you you are mistaken in your diagnosis and will often succeed in convincing you to the contrary.

Take a very great boxer, Tommy Ryan. At one time certain parties questioned his gameness. Later, however, he proved that no game boxer lived, but he had to fight Tommy West and Kid McCoy to a standstill to wipe out the stigma.

They used to say, too, that Peter Maher was a quitter, but later he proved he wasn't. And there have been other pugilists besides Ryan and Maher who have been accused of being quitters when they did not deserve the name.

The question of gameness in the ring was never better illustrated than by Spider Kelly, once the king of seconds and a wonderful boxer in his time. Talking on the subject of quitters one day, he said:

"I have to have awful good proof before I ever accuse a man of quitting, and in my day I would have knocked down any man who ever accused me of possessing that quality."

"At that, there is no sense of taking a licking for nothing or standing a pounding when you have no chance to reciprocate."

"Fighters whom I have met and know are a gritty set. Some, to be sure, have yellow streaks, but those who bear that reputation have generally earned it by being very wise match-makers and taking on only soft marks."

"If a man chooses to take on soft marks, that is really his own affair, and if he can get them without too much trouble and in a legitimate way, who has a right to blame him?"

Willard Defies Old Age; Takes Up Boxing

Mr. Jess Willard of Kansas, well-known in the oil business, started training to become a boxer at Madison Square Garden gym. Mr. Willard said he wanted to fight Jack Dempsey or anybody else, which everybody agree was a delightful example of Kansas humor. Mr. Willard's genial disposition is making many friends, who are taking turns at arguing him out of his pugilistic mania.

French Boxing Federation Clears Georges of Frameup

PARIS, Jan. 15.—All of those accused in connection with the alleged "frame up" of the championship match between "Batting" Siki and Georges Carpentier are cleared by the French boxing federation today by the committee, which has been investigating the charges.

The report says: "The committee is absolutely convinced that the match on September 24, 1922, was not preceded by an understanding, the object of which was to arrange the events of the match and fix the result."

The investigators express regret that certain circumstances have given weight to the accusations in the eyes of many sportsmen. They recommend that the federation in the future take steps to have its regulations strictly applied, so that announcements of purses will not be made which fail to correspond with the contracts signed by the boxers and proper order will be maintained around the boxing rings.

The decision of the investigating committee clears Siki's former manager, M. Hellen, and Georges Carpentier and his manager, Francois Descamps, from charges that an agreement was made by which the Senegalese was to feign defeat in the fourth round. Siki brought his charges, with the aid of the deputy from Senegal, M. Diagne, after the boxing federation declared his newly won title of heavyweight champion forfeited because of an escape at a subsequent fight when, while serving as a second, Siki entered the ring and struck the manager of the boxer opposing his man.

Baseball Players of 1922 Punched Out Three Times More Home Runs Than Athletes of 1912 or 1917

figures interest you?

If so, here's a volume of 'em—all of which speak volumes in a baseball way.

The awesome increase in long-distance clouting and the decadence of the noble art of pilfering are revealed with startling clearness by a comparison of the diamond doings of 1912 and 1917 with those of the season just gone.

In 1912 both leagues punched out a total of 443 home runs; in 1917 they amassed 335. But in 1922 they rolled up the astonishing total of 1,055—a number more than three times greater than five years ago.

And in total basing the athletes of 1922 poked out 34,373 against 26,675 for 1917—an increase of nearly 8,000 extra bases.

Hurry the smelling salts, Salvador!

In every branch of offensive play—except in stolen bases—the boys of last year performed a million miles beyond the athletes of five seasons ago. Add they beat every mark made in the 1912 performers except in the matter of tripping and thievery.

The decline in base stealing is really appalling. The total for 1922 was exactly 1,422. Let's dip down and see what that really means.

There were eight clubs in each league—16 altogether—and each played approximately 134 games. That's really 2,164 combats. An average of 10 men played for each team in each of those games—a total of 24,640 men.

And the best they could do was 1,422 steals.

Here are the statistics. They can speak louder and with more emphasis than all the words that can be written around or of them.

National.	1917.	1922.
Three-base hits	1,591	1,432
Home runs	443	335
Total hits	11,214	10,216
Total bases	26,675	34,373
Stolen bases	1,422	1,422

Sarazen Refused Permission to Play in Europe

New York, Jan. 15.—A tentative decision not to permit Gene Sarazen, American golf champion, a five or six weeks leave of absence to compete in the British open golf championship tournament was voted today by the directors of Briar Cliff Lodge, the Country club at Briar Cliff Manor, N. Y., by whom he is employed as "pro."

"It was the consensus of opinion," said a statement issued by the directors, "that permission should be refused Sarazen for this purpose, but definite action will be taken on his return from an exhibition tour he is making through the west and south."

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 15.—Gene Sarazen, American open golf champion, expressed surprise when informed of the refusal of the directors of Briar Cliff Lodge, the New York Country club, which employs him as professional, to grant him a leave of absence to compete in the British open championship.

Kirkwood and Hagen Lose to Sarazen and Hutchison

Santa Barbara, Cal., Jan. 15.—Gene Sarazen, national open golf champion, and Jock Hutchison, former British open title holder, avenged themselves for two defeats in the north at the hands of Walter Hagen, British open champion, and Joe Kirkwood, Australian champion, when they trounced the latter six and five Sunday.

Basket-Ball Facts You Should Know

Q. What is the radius of center circle?
A. Amateur rules, two feet radius. Professional rules, two feet long three feet apart.

Q. When the ball is being tossed up in center, some guards have the habit of putting their hands on the body of opponent. Is this a foul?
A. Yes, it certainly is.

Q. How to Play Basket Ball.
Official center play No. 4. All plays in which a guard comes in to take the "tap" are dangerous. But when your center has been getting the jump there is very little danger attached to this. Center taps off to left laterally. Left guard comes up fast, gets ball and passes to right forward, who, after starting straight up from his position, has cut towards center of floor. The center has cut out the right side of ring in a wide arc towards basket. The left guard, after making his pass, continues forward. Both he and the center should now be in position to receive a pass from the right forward. The right forward, after passing, will follow through the side of the ring. On this play, when the ball is "tapped," the left forward goes through wide to back court to protect place left open by guard.

Second Round of City Interclass Games Today

The second round of the city interclass games will be played this afternoon at the Central and South High school gymnasiums.

From the results of last week's contests, the Creighton quintets loom up in the title race. The Blue and White youngsters outclassed all their opponents in the opening round of play and the Junior five should have an easy time of it for the next few games on card. The Central Freshmen were the only victors at the Hilltop school, while all the South Hill contenders were set back.

The contest held this afternoon at the Central High court are as follows: Creighton Sophomores against Creighton Freshmen, South Freshmen against Central Freshmen and South Sophomores against Central Sophomores. The Central Sophomores drew a bye. At the South High school "gym" the Central Juniors meet the Creighton Juniors and the Creighton Seniors meet the South High Seniors.

Jones May Play Golf Incognito

New York, Jan. 15.—The father of Robert T. Jones, bearing a relative claim to distinction with Mr. Nation, husband of Carrie, is said to have become so distressed over the failure of Robert T., otherwise Bobbie, to win a national championship in golf as to suggest that Bobbie change his name for purposes of future tournament play. It is thus hoped that Robert will avoid unwelcome attention, of which, ordinarily, he is the focal point.

It seems that all the boys have become so impressed with Bobbie and his ability that they do not hesitate to play their best golf against him, with the result that the young man is still without formal nodding acquaintance with a national title. Some inconsiderate person, shooting par or better, has always interrupted Robert just as he was about to get acquainted.

Low scores have eliminated Bobbie from national championships, never high ones, during recent years, and Mr. Jones, pere, is of the opinion that the great name he bears is to blame. The Joneses are so scattered and so few in number it would appear that any person of this name is as one set apart—a marked man.

He would, therefore, have Bobbie appear under an assumed name, and the rest of the field, being thoroughly taken in and off its guard, would not deem it necessary to resort to the occult in dealing with the young man.
