

Demos at Loss for Issues in Coming Election

Woods Full of Candidates Waiting to Be Picked—Diverse Groups Represent Diversity of Interests.

By GEORGE F. AULTHER, Washington Correspondent The Omaha Bee.

Washington, Jan. 24. — (Special.) — Probably never in the history of a political party has the democratic organization approached a great campaign with less certainty as to its issues or its candidates than the democratic party is approaching the next national election. The woods are filled with possible candidates, but not even the seventh son of a seventh son could venture to predict now, who who will be the party's leader.

The uncertainty as to leadership is connected with the uncertainty as to issues, resulting in a group of candidates of the utmost diversity of views. Some are conservatives like Oscar Underwood of Alabama; some are progressives like Bryan of Nebraska, some are not and some are gray, while still others run the gamut concerning the great Wilsonian issue of the league of nations.

Feeling Out Situation.

Just now these various candidates are feeling out the situation. William Jennings Bryan has been in Washington, pleading with his party associates not to allow the organization to be sold out to the west plus a number of good, red-hot, Bryanese issues on other questions.

William Gilbre McAdoo has been in the city, and rather significantly has lodged at the house of his father-in-law, former President Wilson. The significance of this is that regardless of positive strength which the former president may have in the next democratic convention, he is likely to possess the veto power and no candidate will care to go into the fray with the Wilson proscription marked down against him. It is barely possible Mr. McAdoo has desired to convey the subtle suggestion that Mr. Wilson does not object to the candidacy of his son-in-law.

Seize on Suggestion.

The former president's daughter, Mrs. McAdoo, accompanied her husband, giving the visit an atmosphere of family reunion, but politicians in Washington are quick to seize on suggestions, and they are wondering.

Mr. McAdoo's only comment on his reported candidacy was "bunk," but this, also, deceived no one. In the meantime, Mr. McAdoo is maintaining silence while other possible candidates, like former Governor Cox of Ohio, are doing a great deal of public talking. No one questions the shrewdness of Mr. McAdoo. The less he talks now, the less he will have to explain later.

Former Governor Cox, on the contrary, is a perfect Vesuvius of attention and this much of prophecy might be safe now. Governor Cox is probably less likely to figure in the next democratic convention deliberations than almost any one of a score of leaders.

Homer Cummings Out.

Homer Cummings of Connecticut is also believed out of the race and the same is probably true of Senator Pomeroy of Ohio. Had Senator Pomeroy won in the last election, he would have been a strong contender, although his conservative labor record would probably have rendered him unavailable.

Of the conservative group, Senator Underwood of Alabama is probably the strongest candidate in the field and it is well known in Washington the Alabamian is already engaged in lining up his strength. He made a good showing at Baltimore and will probably have his following at the next convention. His friends believe the time has come when a southern democrat can be considered. Besides, the conservative element in the democratic party will naturally line up behind him. It is unlikely, however, that Underwood will have the Wilson support. He was one of President Harding's delegates to the disarmament conference and helped put the ratification of the conference treaties through the senate. Besides, the general trend of affairs would indicate the party will take a more radical stand than the record of Senator Underwood would justify as a candidate.

Clark Candidacy Looms.

Former Justice Clark of Ohio is a candidate who will have to be reckoned with. He is a Wilson supporter, hails from Ohio and is regarded as being of presidential size. The chief question concerning his candidacy is whether or not the democratic party will care to take up the issue of the league as Wilson left it and as Mr. Clark approves it. Many democratic leaders are now hedging on this issue, saying that while the league was a step in the right direction, the treaty of Versailles was a monumental blunder and will have to be changed before peace can be brought to the world.

However, while the party is appraising its leaders, the wet and dry issue continues to vex it. There is no question but the party is developing an increasing tendency to stand for modification of the Volstead law, believing it will enable them to carry some of the larger northern states, notably New York, and that the south will come through as usual, regardless. In this they will have to reckon upon the opposition of Bryan. The Nebraska has been preaching the temperance issue for so long that the rank and file of the party in the west will be likely to revolt with him.

Of the "wet" candidates, former Secretary of State Bainbridge stands out as a possible selection, although his standing with the party is not any too strong. However, he looms up as more real presidential timber than such staunch adherents of the "wet" cause as Governor Al Smith of New York or Senator Edwards of New Jersey. John W. Davis of West Virginia is an unknown quantity in the presidential situation, who will have to be considered.

Test in West.

Peculiarly enough, the first test of strength on both democratic and republican candidates will come in a western state. The South Dakota law provides that in its convention in December next, it will have to endorse a candidate. The best informed leaders from that state say they have not the slightest knowledge as to whom the South Dakota voters will prefer at that time. This test is just a little less than a year hence and already the leaders are beginning to angle for the South Dakota endorsement because of the prestige that will go with it.

Still another possible candidate who has all the leaders guessing is Henry Ford, the multimillionaire automobile manufacturer of Detroit. No one
