SLEEPY-TIME TALES JIMMY RABBIT ONCE MORE BY ARTHUR SCOTT BAILEY

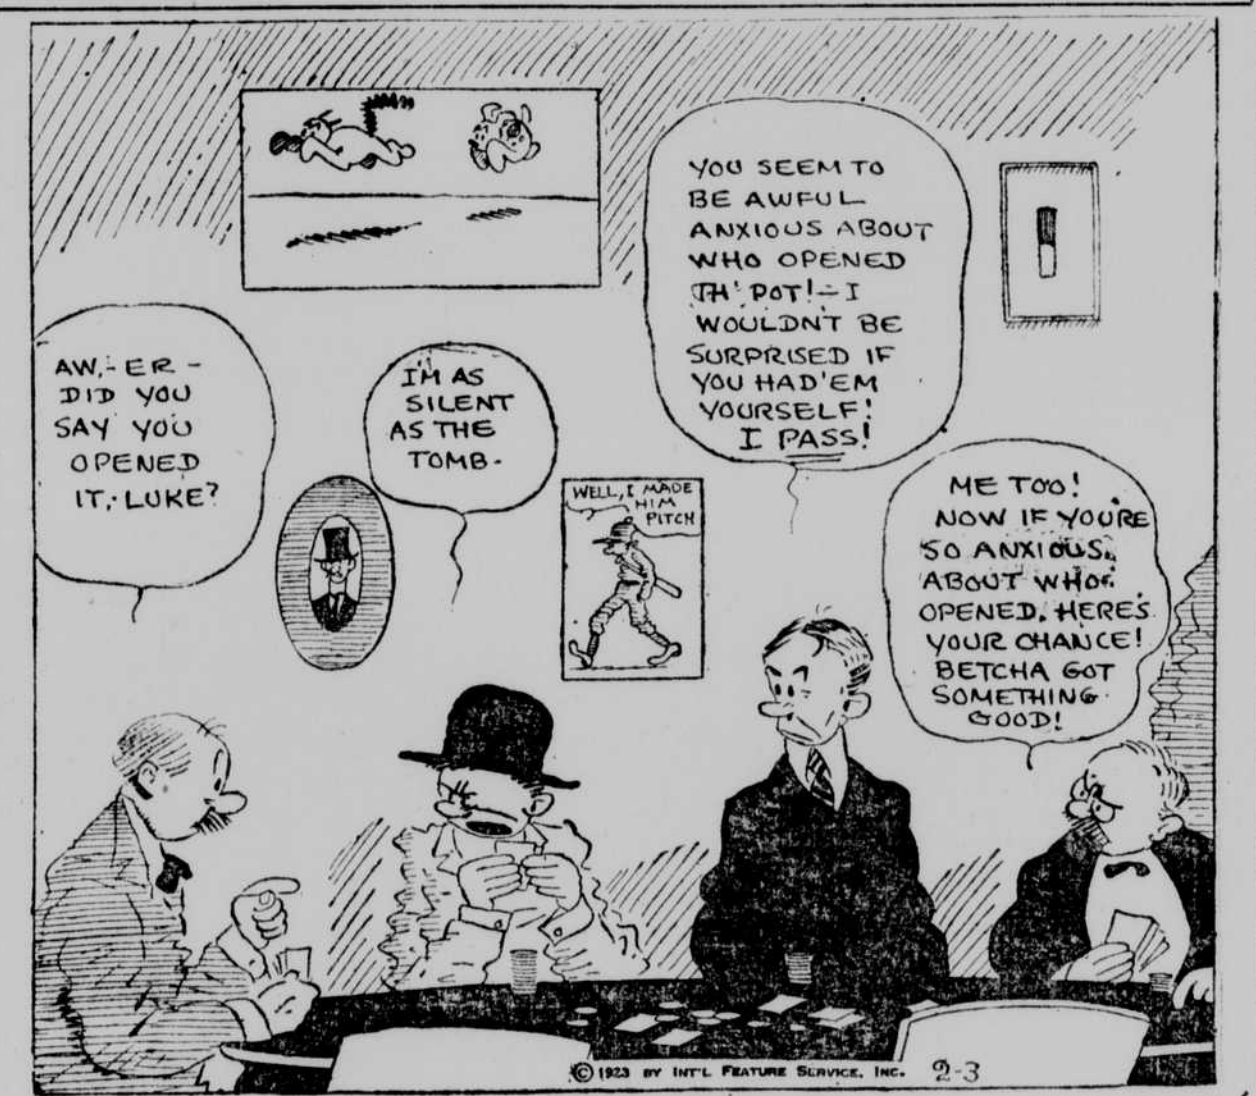

Uncle Isaac Bunny Stays to Dinner. It was plainly to be seen that Uncle Isaac Bunny intended to stay with the Rabbit family in their new home. He had crept into the house in the hollow tree before they arrived there, "to welcome them," he had said. And then, as soon as Mr. and Mrs. Rabbit and their son little Jimmy had come in and dropped their bundles upon the floor, Uncle Isaac beamed upon them and made a few remarks. "I hope," he said, "you'll enjoy your new home here. You ought to sleep dry and warm inside this tree. It's a fine, big place and there'll always be plenty of room for company. I spent six months with my fourth cousins, when they lived here. Many a banquet did we have right here in this room. My fourth cousin's wife is a famous cook—but no better than you, Mrs. Rabbit, I'm sure. Ahem! Did you bring anything to eat in those big bundles?" "I brought an apple in mine," said Jimmy Rabbit, who failed to notice that his mother was shaking her head at him and that his father was winking at him. "An apple?" cried Uncle Isaac Bunny. "I haven't tasted one since last fall. Do let me see it!" Jimmy Rabbit pulled out his apple with an air of great pride. Uncle Isaac quickly seized it. His eyes glistened greedily as he held it to his twitching nose. "Mmm! How good it smells!" he exclaimed. "Now, don't worry," said Mr. Rabbit cheerfully. "After we've had dinner I'll drop a hint or two. And I'm sure Uncle Isaac will go along about his business." "His business," said Mrs. Rabbit, "is to stay here until spring." "Nonsense!" her husband retorted, and he gave Mrs. Rabbit a pat on the back. He had found that pats on the back often calmed her when nothing else would. And then they all sat down to dinner. (Copyright, 1922.) Monday: How Drooping a Pan Brought Mrs. Rabbit Good Luck. Parents' Problems How can spelling best be taught? The old-fashioned spelling bee taught our grandparents to spell. At the present time, there are various sorts of spelling games that answer the same purpose. The toy shops and the school departments of the department stores offer such things for sale at reasonable prices. A Milk Test. Dip a knitting needle into the milk which you may suspect of having been watered. If there are no particles of milk adhering to it when you take it out you may be certain that the milk is watered.

My Marriage Problems Adele Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife" (Copyright 1922) Why Is Claire Interested in Tom Chester?

I listened intently for Dicky's reply to Claire Foster's gibing remark about his indolent appearance. And when it came there was a note in his voice which told me that he was surprised as I at the grotesque sight she presented with her face covered with cold cream, and her hair rolled up tightly in numerous kid curlers. "Thanks," he drawled. "Chivalry prevents my saying what it is of which or from which or to which you remind me." She giggled appreciatively, as if he had just paid her a delightful compliment. "Aren't I this limit?" she carolled. "But just think how bee-yew-tiful I'll be tomorrow when I get dolled up!" "That's something to look forward to, I'll admit," he returned gallantly, and the sound of his rustling newspaper and the tap of her mules going down the corridor told me the colloquy was ended. I hurried my undressing, and was in one of the twin beds when Claire returned. I felt a curious disinclination to talk to her, and felt distinct relief when she disposed of me with the perfunctory inquiry: "Sleepy?" "Why? Why? Why?" "Dead," I returned laconically. "So am I," she said. "Nighty-night." But her regular, healthy, young breathing told me that she slept long before I found forgetfulness in slumber. And I wakened early, unrefreshed, after a series of dreams, through which Claire Foster in her grotesque mask pinquetted before me, while I, clutching ineffectually at her, kept repeating the query: "Why? Why? Why?" I rose, noiselessly, as I thought, and dressed with infinite quiet so as not to disturb her. But she opened her eyes wide while I was coiling my hair, and sprang out of bed. "You should have called me," she said, and bustled through her dressing as if something vital depended upon her hurry. An Ingenious Offer. She wiped the cold cream from her face, put a boudoir cap on top of the kid curlers, though it did not cover them, fastened a rather soiled wrap perfunctorily with a couple of brooches and was at my side when I opened the door. "I'll just wash up and be with you in the kitchen in a minute," she promised, and I wondered if she actually meant to appear at breakfast in so untidy a rig. That she did mean exactly that, I soon saw, but I forgot my distaste at her action in acute worry over the carelessness she exhibited in handling the exquisite belongings of Mrs. Bliss. Just in the nick of time I prevented her from setting a burning hot platter upon the polished surface of the antique mahogany table, and all my watchfulness was not able to prevent the breaking of one of the etched water glasses which she dropped in the sink. Fortunately it was not a piece of old glass, but I foresaw a long weary and expensive shopping trip in trying to match it. I was therefore in no very equable humor when Claire looked up from the toast she was watching to ask, with seeming irrelevance: "What's ever become of Tom Chester, Maggie?" "He's in Sag Harbor, I believe." "Is he still as indifferent as ever to all feminine charms save your own?" "What do you mean?" I flashed angrily, then with an uneasy fear that Dicky might have awakened, I added quickly: "Don't be ridiculous!" "I'm not," she returned imperturbably. "But I sure would like to know, for I'll tell the world he's about the nicest lad I've ever seen. Even in the days when Herbie's gloomy romantic eyes intrigued my youthful imagination, I had a weather-eye out for that lad. But would he look at me? He would not, and anybody with half an eye could see the reason why. But, surely, you don't intend to keep him dangling in your train forever. I'll tell you what I'll do," she exclaimed, "I'll buy you a five-pound box of bonbons if you'll disengage him somehow, and let me have a chance at him!" Uncle Sam Says Fruit and Vegetable Gardens. It will soon be time to begin to plan next year's fruit and vegetable garden. In that connection, this booklet which is issued by the Federal Bureau of Plant Industry will prove valuable. A home garden is incomplete unless it includes some of the more permanent vegetables and small fruits in addition to the regular annual vegetables that are usually planted. A bed of asparagus, several hills of rhubarb, some horse-radish, berries and grapes are valuable additions to the home garden. Full cultural directions together with suggestions for the choice of permanent fruits and vegetables are contained in this booklet. Readers of The Omaha Bee may obtain a copy of this booklet free as long as the free edition lasts by writing to the Division of Publications, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., asking for "F. B. 1242." Sensible Playthings. Rubber toys are the best for infants. Then you are not worried if they put them in their mouths, and they can be kept clean and sanitary by frequent washings. WHEN IN NEED OF HELP TRY OMAHA BEE WANT ADS.

Problems That Perplex

To Get Rid of Boys. Dear Miss Fairfax: Since you have given such excellent advice to others I am coming to you with my troubles. I am a girl of 15 summers and a junior. I have dark brown bobbed hair which curls naturally. I have blue eyes and all in all I am not very good looking, but in spite of this the boys bother me very much. I am not allowed to go with boys, and it annoys me very much to have them try to escort me home. Please tell me, Miss Fairfax, how I can get rid of them. Please answer in The Omaha Bee. JEAN. You can get rid of the boys by really wanting to be rid of them. I think you really like their attention and only want others to think you don't.
