Novel Birthday Party for Mrs. Hall

A Hindu gentleman visiting in London, watched his English host dance. At the end of the whirl the Hindu asked his host: "Why do you not let one of your servants do that for you?" Dancing, to the Hindu looked like hard labor, with nothing what-

Of course, the fun's in doing it, far more fun, thought the guests of Mrs. D. C. Olmsted at luncheon on Thursday who brought their own en tertainment in the form of original short poems and clever little talks representing the months of the year. The party was given in honor of the birthday of Mrs. U. K. Half. A number of those present were co-mem bers with Mrs. Hall in the Sunday school class of Mrs. A. L. Patrick. At each plate was a place card suggestive of the month the person was representing. Mrs. G. W. Noble let the turkey talk for her, as she said, in speaking of November:

epeaking of November:

"Gobble, gobble, gobble, what an awful
Tot of trouble,
Is there any rhyme or reason in a birthday out of season
Just when the holidays are safely past
From the barnyard I was taken
While my heart was paipitatin'
For it surely was the end of me.
But instead I'm here to greet you
With no fear of words like "Eat you."
And I can have my little say with all of ye.
Now I got a hunch on
To bring something to this luncheon
That would express to Ida, our dear friend,
How very much we love her.

Mrs. W. L. Alldrege, who respreent ed May, brought with her a bouquet of spring flowers, and named each flower in it, the wood anemone, the johnny jumpup, the tulip, the iris, the primrose, and others for each one of the guests. She finished her little poem with one more flower of which she spoke.

Economy for the Shopper By Mrs. Harlan H. Allen

Selecting a Portable Oven.

It is one problem to buy a porta ble oven if it is to handle all the baking, and quite another problem if you are looking for an accessory Mrs. Edwin S. Jewell, 4220 Harney oven to be used in connection with street. the coal or gas range only when the installed oven is already in use.

The first question to answer is shall it cover one or two burners on Guild of Organists, will hold its the stove? For heavy baking like bread, and the roasting of meat, one m., at the Brandels restaurant. usually needs for "floor" room than can be had in a one-burner oven. Also the two-burner oven affords more opportunity for substantial construction; so it will usually stand up under hard usage better. A third point is that a two-burner oven is more economical of heat. There is not more than once and a half the boxing to keep warm in the larger one, while it has twice as much fire underneath. The two fires also serve to distribute the heat better throughout the oven, and that is perhaps the weakest point of the unattached oven. As a rule then, you can't afford to buy a one-burner oven for family use, while for purely accessory purposes the single-burner may fill the bill exactly, and of course it takes up less room when Food is more likely to burn on the bottom in a portable oven because of the light material used. To offset this, you should select a style with plenty of height so that both shelves may be raised well up from the fire. The temperature at the top of the oven is almost as hot as the bottom, and much more even. That's why pastry and other things brown prettier up there. The matter of height is very important, especially when you have two shelves or racks full of bread. For this reason, it is best to see that the baffle bottom and lower rack are two separate pleces. If you want to spread the heat better in a low oven you already own. buy a piece of asbestos board of a size slightly smaller than the baffle plate to lay upon it. This can be purchased of any good store that handles kitchen ware. You will need a portable thermometer with an unattached oven even more than with the range. The thin foors do not close with equal eveness every time, and for other reasons the temperature is harder to judge accu-

Problems That Perplex By Beatrice Fairax.

A Thoughtful Man.

Dear Miss Fairfax: My flance wants me to meet his sister, who lives in a small Nebraska town about 50 miles from here. Would it be proper for us to go on the train alone, for such Mrs. Charles E. Mathews of Denver, a small journey? He should buy the tickets, shouldn't he?

What should I say to my future sister-in-law when we meet? Should I call her "Anne" or "Mrs. D.?" Would she expect me to kiss her? Could I with propriety?

They are staying at a hotel. If we have lunch before we go to their rooms, and she wears neither hat nor coat, shall I remove my hat? If so,
