agricultural paper for a longer period than six months. This period has been increased to nine months. "A large number of state banks are not now members of the federal reserve system, some of them because their capital is not large enough to meet the requirements of the law. An amendment to the federal reserve act is carried in this bill designed to encourage small banks to join the system. A bank which has capital equal only to 60 per cent of the capital required of national banks may now be admitted, if within a reason-able time the capital will be increased to correspond with the capital required of national banks.

"Life of the war finance corporation is extended to February 29, 1924. the expectation being that by that date the new credit facilities provided for under this agricultural credits act will be sufficient to meet the needs.

"This agricultural credits act of 1923 is one of the most important acts passed by the last congress. It marks an earnest effort to provide the farmer with the sort of credit he must have to carry on efficiently. It is not class legislation. The results will be helpful to business in general, because the effect will be to stabilize agricultural production and marketing."
