Replacing China

By LORETTA C. LYNCH.
Many a woman who would not think of wearing one black shoe and one brown when she steps out does not seem to realize that it is a decided reflection upon her if she will tolerate in the sacred precincts of her home the sugar bowl with one handle missing, the handless cup, the nicked or cracked plate, the presence of a conglomeration of drinking glasses all on the same table, or perhaps with a stem, another of utterly different shape and the next one may be one of those abominable souvenir colored glasses with "Martha" or "Joe" or "Merry Xmas" on it. Now, if your china of glassware is anything like that, above, plan to take advantage of the price concessions the better shops are offering in the way of these necessities. It is most desirable to buy from what is termed "open stock." If you wish to add to or replace your stock at any time, by buying at a reliable shop keeping "open stock," it is a very easy matter to replace that particular glass or cup which has been accidentally broken.

With summer, but a stone's throw away, perhaps you will want to look at those charming tea-sets which the advent of prohibition has developed to a nicely heretofore unknown. The shops are making huge price concessions in the way of glass punch bowls, and the woman who entertains will do well to consider purchasing one of these and as many little punch cups as she desires.

But, generally speaking, every good housekeeper should take inventory of her household glass and china at least once a year and aim to replace or add to these necessities of civilization during these important sales.

Betrothed

Why Build a Home Without a Foundation?

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
People living in cyclone countries don't build houses on stilts. Those who dwell at the shore, don't dig houses on the sand. Everyone knows that a house which is built to weather the elements must stand on a strong foundation. Digging that foundation may take a long time and a deal of money. But the wise builder puts a great deal of his skill into the part of the house which does not show—but which supports all the visible structure.

Our lives are like that, too. No life is a stable, durable thing unless it is built on a strong foundation. No strong foundation was ever dug overnight.

There are parts of the country where builders have to blast through rock. There are places where it is necessary to dig through layers of sandy soil. I know a spot in a New England city where the earth's strata are so tilted and spongy that unless the foundations for building go very deep, the building is sure to tilt and lie when once it is up.

Now, we humans have varying substrata to our natures. And so when we want to build securely, we have to dig down deep enough to get a good solid foundation. Not only do we have to go deep into our own natures to get to firm foundations, but we have to get well under trivial surfaces with the folks we encounter.

All of which makes it fairly evident that important things can't be done in a hurry. Youth, however, has a hard time remembering such homely but honest aphorisms as the one which announces that Rome wasn't built in a day.

Nothing worth while is built quickly; love, success, achievement, money, character or position, don't fancy for a moment that you can rub a magic bowl and have an obliging slave bring you your wish—full blown and perfect.

Whatever you want, you'll have to learn to wait hard enough to work for and toward. You'll have to learn to wait it intelligently. You'll have to overcome laziness, discouragement, and the spoiled child attitude of thinking life ought to give you free prizes.

Long time must elapse before the bright dreams of youth can be translated from the cloudy realm of fairy to the sturdy world of reality. Don't grow desperate. Eighteen, because life has not sent you companionship or love, You'll have to prepare yourself for them—to deserve them—to build foundations for them.

Don't be unhappy. Twenty-one, because you are not in the right environment. You'll have to earn your way there and to spend time in an effort in making yourself right, so when you reach the environment for which you yearn, you'll be able to abide there.

"These Shoes Are Comfortable!"

One of our customers tried on a pair of Cantilever Shoes at our suggestion. She took a few steps. Then, as if a weight had been lifted from her mind, she smiled and said: "These shoes are really comfortable!"

She had found one of the secrets of happiness. For there is no great enjoyment anywhere—out of doors or indoors—if one's feet are uncomfortable.

The great majority of shoes are made of lasts which scarcely resemble the shape of the human foot. So the foot is packed into a shoe which is more rigid than the foot, and the foot does its best to assume the shape of the shoe. No wonder there is so much foot trouble in the world.

The ideal upon which the Cantilever Shoe has been built is that the shape and action of the foot must be given first consideration. Style is an added feature. The result is a harmonious combination which pleases both the eye and the foot.

You will enjoy Cantilever Shoes for their looks, for their natural and comfortable lines, their sensible heels. The flexible arch permits a freedom to the muscles which results in easier walking, less tiresome standing, and a healthful condition of the feet.

Some people go about with "a weight on the mind;" others with a weight on their feet—but this is easily removed by changing to Cantilever Shoes.

All guesswork eliminated. Every shoe is fitted by X-Ray without extra charge to you.
