Desecration of Graves by Oil Drillers Is Prevented by Armed Guards.

Enid, Okl., March 21.—Reports that two men were slain in a clash at the Prairie View churchyard in the Tonkawa oil field, center of a conflict between rival oil operators and members of the Prairie View Cemetery association were declared to be unfounded by authorities last night. Sheriff James M. Barner of Kay county said that his deputies had returned from the field after an investigation, which proved that the reports were untrue. The chief of police at Tonkawa, who made a personal investigation, denied that there had been any killings. Members of the Prairie View Cemetery association have maintained an armed guard about the churchyard since Charles E. Knox, Enid oil operator, started preparation to sink an oil well on his property which covers the churchyard. Knox and his attorney recently were ejected from the property by armed farmers when they attempted to mark out a site for the well. Members of the cemetery association declare they will not permit a well to go down in the burial plot or near enough to it to allow graves to be flooded. Piggly Wiggly Makes Big Advance "Over the Counter" New York, March 21.—Barred from the "big board" of the New York Stock exchange, Piggly Wiggly today made another sensational advance "over the counter." When trading opened the stock was quoted at 75 bid and 85 asked, but shortly before 11:30 o'clock the quotations read 100 bid and 150 asked.

at Davenport, Ia., on Thursday and Friday. President John H. Beveridge spoke the Creighton Glee club sang, and Arthur Prudenfeld presented two vaudeville acts from the World theater. After the dinner, 25 Omaha Rotarians joined the visitors on a special train to Davenport. President Beveridge and Rev. Frank G. Smith will be the Omaha speakers at the conference. Society Bore Ganna Walska Declares She's an "Old-Fashioned Girl"—Doesn't Smoke Nor Drink.

Chicago, March 21.—Mme Ganna Walska McCormick declares "only my husband and my singing" "only myself and my singing" and feels herself an "old-fashioned girl" the beautiful singer and wife of Harold McCormick, harvester company millionaire, was quoted in a newspaper interview today. The singer displayed patience with the critics who have not praised her singing although they have paid tribute to her pulchritude. In the fall, she said after explaining that she would sing in Paris again soon, "I go to all the best American cities to sing. They will listen to me then."

"They do not draw 'cold potato' at me there," she said, referring to Paris. "Caruso and Calve—they received the 'cold potato' when they first sang. They 'stone' Calve when she first appear in Europe." Mme. Walska does not particularly like society affairs although she has been received with open arms by the McCormick family. "The dinners, they bore me, I care not to eat," she said. "I have not the time. I work—work all day, then at night I go to sleep when I have not to sing." "I am an old-fashioned girl," she went on. "I do not smoke—I do not drink—I abhor the receptions and the wild parties." She and her husband leave Friday for New York where they remain until April 5, when she will sail to France. In June she returns to Chicago to rest and wait until fall when she plans a tour of American cities.

Little Heroes of the Storm

It will be many a long year before last week's blizzard—the most severe March storm in history—fades from the memory of the people. The high spots that will be remembered are the tie-up of traffic, the severe cold and the heroism with which these conditions were met by workers in the business and industrial world, many of whom found travel "on the hoof" the only available means of transportation. It was on Sunday, however, when these business and industrial workers were luxuriating "in the feathers," or idling over a late breakfast, that some of the greatest heroes of the storm were valiently going about their duty in spite of icy winds and driving snows. The newspaper carrier boys are not much concerned with city transportation tie-ups. They do their work afoot anyway, and they are expected to perform their function of distributing newspapers in all weathers and under all conditions. Perhaps it is because of their very faithfulness that so little attention is paid, as a rule, to the work they do. Perhaps if they failed a little oftener we would be more inclined to stop and consider their difficulties. That their difficulties were real, you who struggled through that wind and snow are ready to testify. That their courage was great, you who tried, whether you succeeded or turned back, can fully appreciate. In the old days owners of horses hesitated to take their animals out in extremely rough weather. On Sunday literally thousands of car owners would not venture out with their machines because they could not trust their powerful engines to combat the force of drifted snow and raging elements. But nearly a thousand newsboys in Omaha, between the ages of 12 and 18, left their various substations laden with the heaviest paper of the week, to face wind and snow, and heart-breaking cold, to deliver their papers and keep bright their record for unbroken service. Sometimes we've wondered at the great number of eminently successful business men who have started their business careers as newsboys. This incident just about explains it. Newsboys have a way of doing what they start out to do. A few isolated cases last Sunday, where boys became exhausted and were unable to finish their routes, is not evidence to the contrary. It proves, rather, what a genuinely perilous task they had to perform and how valiantly they met their responsibility. The Brandeis Store, in its own behalf and in behalf of the entire community, gives this appreciation of the splendid service rendered by these little heroes of the storm.
