

Henry Ford Buys 125,000 Acres Coal Land for $20,000,000

Noted Auto Manufacturer Predicts Era of "Big Business" Coming to America.

Lexington, Ky., March 22.—It became known today that Henry Ford has bought 125,000 acres of coal land on the Kentucky river in Clay and Leslie counties at a price to run from $12,000,000 to $20,000,000.

Detroit, Mich., March 22.—Within 20 years industry will have grown to such vast proportions that "big business" of today will be small in comparison, according to opinion expressed by Henry Ford in a review of conditions and prophecy for the future.

Mr. Ford is an optimist. But he believes that investment in a concern merely for the sake of profits is "bad business." Outside capital, Fred declared, interferes with industrial progress. Money paid out in dividends, he believes, should go back into the business to improve and expand it.

A manufacturer should run his business just as he runs his home, the famous motor car maker said.

To Construct Highway. Ford thinks that within five years or so most of the railways will be electrified. He revealed that he intends to construct a model highway paralleling the Toledo and Ironton railroad which he bought several years ago.

"Within 20 years industry will be so magnified that the big business of today will be small in comparison," was Ford's answer to the question—"What is industry coming to?"

Must Gain Confidence.

Continuing, Mr. Ford said: "Industry is coming to big business. Not big business as we now know it—big business is what I mean. We have, within four miles of where you are sitting, a plant which is a big plant when compared to other manufacturing plants of today. It employs more than 30,000 men. This big plant is our best furnace, where we use just three things in the raw—coal, ore and wood. From these three fundamentals we produce a multitude of products.

"People look at the plant and say 'what a big place' it is—today. It won't be 20 years from today, industry will be a big business that takes materials in the raw and turns them into a finished product at a price the average consumer can pay. There will be an elimination of the various profits of the various middle men. Those profits will not remain because they are unnatural profits. They are the profits of people who do not create. To be entitled to a profit a man must create or must serve some indispensable need in the process of production and distribution."

"But, to succeed, big business must first gain the confidence of the public," he said.

New Vegetables in Omaha Market

Plenty of Green Stuff of All Kinds and Fresh Fish Now in Demand.

New asparagus from California arrived on the Omaha market this week and is selling wholesale at 75 cents for two bunches. California green peas of fine quality and Florida green and green beans are being received daily. In fact, there are now plenty of green vegetables of most every kind to be had.

Florida celery is just starting to come in. Romaine is off the market for a spell, but fruit commission houses are expecting an Easter supply to take care of that trade. Movement of grape fruit, oranges and apples remains about normal.

The 28-degree weather in Louisiana in the early weeks may have an effect on strawberries for Easter. Those coming through for that trade will naturally be high in price, and in limited quantities. Florida's strawberry season is about at an end, and berries from that locality are now beginning to show softness and an overripe condition.

Fresh fish and fresh trout from Wisconsin are highly favored varieties of fish at the present time. The shad season will open next week. Soft shell crabs are expected to arrive for Easter week. Lobsters are extremely high in price, but in good supply. The Easter market is again easing up after recent coast storms, and the supply is meeting the demand.

ONE OF OURS

By WILLA CATHER. Famous Nebraska Author.

Claude Wheeler, living on a Nebraska ranch with his parents and a younger brother, Ralph, returns for the summer vacation from Temple college, small denominational school at Lincoln, which he has been attending unwillingly because he prefers to go to the state university. Two things have happened during his third year, however, to cheer him. One of these is his enrollment in a special European history class under a professor in the state university. The other is the chance acquaintance with Julius Erlich, university quarterback, and his brother, who makes the shy boy feel at home on his enormous visits to the Erlich residence. Claude's father, Nat Wheeler, buys a ranch in Colorado. Care of the ranch necessitates the absence of Mr. Wheeler and Ralph from their Nebraska home, and Claude has to quit school to take care of the home place. An older brother, Bayliss, runs an implement store at Frankfort.

CHAPTER XVI. Ralph and his father came home to spend the holidays, and on Christmas day Bayliss drove out from town for dinner. He arrived early, and after greeting his mother in the kitchen, went up to the sitting room which she shared with a holiday neatness, and found the door ajar. He stepped in, Bayliss—having a low circulation, he felt the cold acutely. He walked up and down, jangling the keys in his pockets, admiring his mother's winter chrysanthemums, which were still blooming. Several times he paused before the old-fashioned secretary, looking through the glass doors at the volumes within. The sight of some of those books awoke disagreeable memories. When he was a boy of 14 he had been here, when his mother told him stories, he at once tried to prove to her how they could not possibly be true. Later he found arithmetic and geography more interesting than "Robinson Crusoe." It had been with a book, he wanted to feel that he was learning something. His mother and Claude were always talking over his head about the people in books and stories.

Though Bayliss had a sentimental feeling about coming home, he considered that he had had a lonely boy's hood. At the country school he had not been happy; he was the boy who always got the answers to the test problems when the others didn't, and he kept his arithmetic papers buttoned up in the inside pocket of his little jacket until he modestly handed them to the teacher, never giving a neighbor the benefit of his cleverness. Leonard Dawson and other lusty lads of his own age made life as terrifying for him as they could. In winter they used to throw him into a snow drift, and then run away and leave him. In summer they made him eat live grasshoppers behind the schoolhouse, and put big bull-snakes in his dinner pail to surprise him. To this day, Bayliss liked to see one of his big fists couldn't get him out of it.

It was because Bayliss was quick at figures and undervalued for a farmer that his father sent him to town to learn the implement business. From the day he went to work, he managed to live on his small salary. He kept in his vest pocket a little day book wherein he noted down all his expenditures—like the millionaire about whom the Baptist preachers were never tired of talking—and his offering to the contribution box stood out conspicuous in his weekly account.

In Bayliss' voice, even when he used his irritating drawl and said disagreeable things, there was something of a depressed sense of injury. He felt that he had always been misunderstood and underestimated. Later and detained him by an indefinite remark. "I believe there's to be a musical show in Hastings Saturday night." Claude said he had heard something of the sort. "I was thinking," Bayliss affected a careless tone, as if he thought of such things every day, "that we might make a party and take Gladys and Endi. The roads are pretty good." "It's a hard drive home, so late at night," Claude objected. Bayliss meant, of course, that Claude should drive the party up and back in Mr. Wheeler's big car. Bayliss never used his glistening Cadillac for long, rough drives. "I guess mother would put us up over night, and we needn't take the girls home till Sunday morning. I'll get the tickets." "You'd better arrange it with the girls, then. I'll drive you, of course, if you want to go."

Claude nodded and went out, wishing that Bayliss would do his own courting and not drag him into it. Bayliss, who didn't know one tune from another, certainly didn't want to go to this concert, and it was doubtful whether Bayliss would care much about going. Gladys Farmer was the best musician in Frankfort, and she would probably like to hear it. Claude and Gladys were old friends from their high school days, though they hadn't seen much of each other while he was going to college. Several times this fall Bayliss had asked Claude to go somewhere with him on a Sunday, and then stopped to "pick up Gladys," as he said. Claude didn't like it. He was disgusted, anyhow, when he saw that Bayliss had made up his mind to marry Gladys. She and her mother were so poor that he would probably succeed in the end, though so far Gladys didn't seem to give him much encouragement. Marrying Bayliss, he thought, would be no joke for any woman, but Gladys was the one girl in town whom he particularly ought not to marry. She was as extravagant as she was poor. Though she taught in the Frankfort High school for twelve hundred a year, she had prettier clothes than any of the other girls, except Enid Royce, whose father was a rich man. Her new hats and suede shoes were discussed and criticized year in and year out. People said if she married Bayliss Wheeler, he would soon bring her down to hard facts. Some hoped she would, and some hoped she would not. As for Claude, he had kept away from Mrs. Farmer's cheerful parlor ever since Bayliss had begun to drop in there. He was disappointed in Gladys. When he was offended, he seldom stopped to reason about his state of feeling. He avoided the person, and the thought of the person, as if it were a sore spot in his mind. (To Be Continued.)

Claude was in the upper hall putting on his coat to go down to the barn and smoke a cigar, when Bayliss came out from the sitting room.

Mrs. Wheeler looked at him over the coffee pot with a droil, guilty smile. "I don't believe coffee hurts me a particle, Bayliss."
