

Trial of 'Louise' Put Off; Threat Told by Accuser

Woman Who Led Expose of Self-Styled Bootlegger Queen Accompanied to Federal Court.

Trial of Mrs. Louise Vinciguerra, charged with possession and sale of liquor and maintaining a nuisance, was postponed Thursday in federal court. She was to have been placed on trial at 1 and a large number of witnesses were present.

She is alleged to have boasted that she made $45,000 in less than two years bootlegging. Shortly after this she was arrested with her husband, Sebastiano.

Threats of vengeance Thursday were injected into the case of the government against Louise Vinciguerra, "abdicating queen of the bootleggers."

"Numerous anonymous telephone calls have threatened violence to me," Mrs. Elizabeth Rogers, representative of the Nebraska Humane society, whose expose of "the queen" led to her arrest, said as she went to court yesterday to appear against Louise.

"Two of them were from Louise herself, the voice said. Others were from different people. One told me to beware of a young foreigner who is supposed to be shadowing me. I haven't been able to detect him, neither have I armed myself. I don't believe anyone will carry out the threats."

But with Mrs. Rogers when she went to court was a companion, Miss Florence Brugger, also a Humane society worker.

Mrs. Rogers testified against Mrs. Vinciguerra when "the queen" was first haled into police court on a minor liquor charge and exposed an alleged advertising system of the "royal bootlegger," calculated to help get high school students into her alleged establishment.

It is the duty of every Christian and civilized person in the world to help the widows and orphaned families of the 600,000 men who died in the prison camps of Siberia," declared Miss Brandstrom.
