

Our Children

By ANGELO PATRI. Isn't He Awful.

All of a sudden one day mother discovers that John Thomas, "who has always been the best of boys to his mother, obedient and pleasant and all that and willing to be advised, and always a home boy," is not any of these things.

night before until she is reminded of the fact that to get him to bed on time is even more difficult. He recalls advice. "Aw, what's the idea? Think I'm a baby? Think I don't know how to take care of myself? Why can't I stay until 10 o'clock? It isn't dark. No, it isn't and anyway aren't the other fellows there? You never want me to go anywhere. You think all the fellows are no good. Make a baby out of me. Never had any fun in this house."

thickly over it. Mother shudders and hides the catsup bottle and adds lemon peel to the prunes and wonders sadly where all her training has gone. This, her son, who used to eat his prunes and drink his milk and devour the soft-boiled eggs without protest now demands coffee and sausages. And rumbles and squeaks in a horrible voice when he does not get them, too.

two at a time whistling shrilly as he lurches out and bangs the door behind him. He comes home from school one afternoon and blurts out, "Mother, if you don't make Helen leave me and my friends alone I'll do something to her that will make her behave herself. You and father never say a word to her and she does what she pleases. You got to make her stop. She called out on the street to me today when I was walking home with Jean Jones, 'O you--oo. Keeping up with the Jones.' What will people think?" And then this strange creature actually bursts into tears.

wisely as you can. Father ought to be very helpful. If you trained him the right way from the time he was born until now you need have no fear. He will come through safely. All you need to do now is to be patient and watchful and wait. And for everybody's sake, soothe him, for he is like a cockerel "penning out." Pesky but full of promise. His full plumage will appear all in good time. (Copyright, 1922.)

Burgess-Nash Will Open New "Mezzanine Fountain"

The new "mezzanine fountain" on the mezzanine floor of the Burgess-Nash store will open this morning. The fountain and its equipment are said to be the most elaborate and beautiful in the city. Chairs and tables for guests are of Italian wrought iron; table tops are of Italian marble, and dark green in color, and the fountain is of marble and mahogany. The decorative scheme is complete in every detail. Wrought iron gates lead to the fountain. Walls of the mezzanine are of green. Light lunches and fountain drinks will be served in green glassware and on Italian china, and the waitresses will be dressed in rainbow costumes of an interesting style.
