

Pastors Praise Homes Exhibit

"We Can't Do Too Much to Beautify Home," Says One Minister.

Omaha ministers are heartily in sympathy with the aims of the Better Homes exposition which is to be held in the Auditorium for five days, beginning Monday, under auspices of The Omaha Bee.

"We can't do too much to add beauty and warmth to our homes," said Rev. J. Clyde Mahaffey, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. "Influence of the home on young people is much greater than is generally realized. The home is a vital factor to civilization. I would say the home is one of the most sacred, yes, the most sacred of our institutions. For, if the home goes, everything goes."

"There is no question about the worth of the Better Homes exposition idea," said Rev. Frank G. Smith, pastor of the First Central Congregational church. "I believe we are increasingly learning to understand how one's environment affects, even physically. A recent public school musical memory contest revealed the fact that by giving pupils a chance to hear better music a taste for the best music is cultivated in them. The influence of the Better Homes exposition should be the same. It isn't a question of how much is spent in interior decoration and furnishing, but of how much taste is used in selecting things for the home."

"I most certainly want to be quoted as being favorable to the Better Homes exposition," said Rev. J. W. G. Frost, pastor of the First Methodist church. "The exhibition should help the thousands to make their homes what they should be. 'The average person hasn't time to study home decoration,'" said Rev. Patrick J. Judge, pastor of the Church of the Sacred Heart. "Hence I am convinced the Better Homes exposition will do much good. It should give people valuable ideas about making their environment more attractive."

"Omaha is a home loving city," said Rev. Edwin Hart Jenks, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. "People are building their homes more substantially than in years past, as if they intended to live in them. Any-

He was not a blusterer, like Oberlies, but a big, quiet man, with a serious, large-featured face, and a stern mouth that seldom opened. His countenance might have been cut out of red sandstone. It was so heavy and fixed. He and Oberlies sat on the wooden chairs outside the railing of the judge's desk. Presently the judge stopped writing and said he would hear the charges against Troilus Oberlies. Several neighbors took the stand in succession; their complaints were confused and almost humorous. Oberlies had said the United States would be licked, and that would be a good thing; America was a great country, but it was run by fools, and to be governed by Germany was the best thing that could happen to it. The witness went on to say that since Oberlies had made his money in this country—

CHAPTER IX. One bright June day Mr. Wheeler packed his car in a line of motors before the brick court house in Frankfort. The court house stood in an open square, surrounded by a grove of cottonwoods. The lawn was freshly cut and the flower beds were blooming. When Mr. Wheeler entered the courtroom upstairs, it was already half full of farmers and townspeople, talking in low tones while the summer breeze buzzed in and out of the open windows. The judge, a one-eyed man, with white hair and side-whiskers, sat at his desk, writing with his left hand. He was an old settler in Frankfort county, but from his frock-coat and courtly manners you might have thought he had come from Kentucky yesterday instead of 30 years ago. He was to hear this morning a charge of disloyalty brought against two German farmers. One of the accused was August Yoeder, the other's nearest neighbor, and the other was Troilus Oberlies, a rich German from the northern part of the county. Oberlies owned a beautiful farm and lived in a big white house set on a hill, with a fine orchard, rows of beehives, barns, granaries and poultry yards. He raised turkeys and ducks swam about on his cattle pond. He used to boast that he had six sons, "like our German emperor." His neighbors were proud of his place, and pointed it out to strangers. They told how Oberlies had come to Frankfort county a poor man, and had made his fortune by his industry and intelligence. He had twice crossed the ocean to re-visit his fatherland, and when he returned to his home on the prairies he brought presents for every one; his place, and pointed it out to strangers. They told how Oberlies had picked up in Germany. He was an older man than Yoeder, wore a short beard that was white and curly, like his hair, and though he was low in stature, his puffy red face and full blue eyes, and a certain swagger about his carriage, gave him a look of importance. He was helpful and quick-tempered, but until the war broke out in Europe nobody had ever had any trouble with him. Since then he had constantly found fault and complained—everything was better in the old country.

Mr. Wheeler had come to town prepared to lend Yoeder a hand if he needed one. They had worked adjoining fields for 30 years now. He was surprised that his neighbor had got into trouble. He was not a blusterer, like Oberlies, but a big, quiet man, with a serious, large-featured face, and a stern mouth that seldom opened. His countenance might have been cut out of red sandstone. It was so heavy and fixed. He and Oberlies sat on the wooden chairs outside the railing of the judge's desk. Presently the judge stopped writing and said he would hear the charges against Troilus Oberlies. Several neighbors took the stand in succession; their complaints were confused and almost humorous. Oberlies had said the United States would be licked, and that would be a good thing; America was a great country, but it was run by fools, and to be governed by Germany was the best thing that could happen to it. The witness went on to say that since Oberlies had made his money in this country—
