

Early Lettuce on Market Here

Home-Grown Vegetables Making Appearance in Shops of Omaha.

Home grown leaf lettuce, rhubarb and green onions put in their appearance on the Omaha market this week. These different commodities are grown in various sections adjacent to Omaha.

New cabbage from California, Mississippi and Texas is arriving in plentiful supply. Quality of cauliflower arriving is fair, asparagus has advanced in price, and tomatoes are scarce.

New potatoes are coming from Florida and Texas. The market on this vegetable is gradually growing easier, and the supply sufficient to meet the demand. The cucumber market has eased to some extent.

The first California black cherries were placed on the Omaha market during the present week.

Strawberry market is steady, and the quality of the berries coming is very good.

Very little poultry is moving. This is attributed to the fact that farmers are busy and not coming to market, nor shipping, coupled with the additional fact that hens are laying exceptionally well at this season.

Our Children

By ANGELO PATIN. Quarreling Children.

When brothers and sisters meet they quarrel. It grieves their mothers, who feel that the children are learning to hate each other, that one is bullying the others, that one is given to teasing and another to sulking. She is astonished to discover that her children cannot live together in peace.

It may be small comfort to know it, but the fact is children always quarrel. The family group is so close in mind and body that their edges rub and cut and as children have not had sufficient experience to teach them restraint and control they follow their impulses and fight.

We are born that way. When we are annoyed the first impulse is to strike out and abolish the thing that is annoying us. If a mosquito comes along and settles down to bite, our first thought is to whack him flat, rub the spot until it burns again and fuss ourselves into a bad temper about the pest.

Experience teaches us better. We brush the pest away, killing him quite as effectually. We ignore the spot and turn our minds away from the annoyance. But that takes training through experience and a certain philosophy attained by much reflection. Children have not the idea. They have but the untrained impulse to strike out with tongue or hand or foot at the annoyance. The result is a family squabble.

If possible let it settle itself. If it comes to fistfights, of course, it must be stopped and the contestants separated long enough to let them cool off, long enough to let in that lone-some feeling that steals into the heart at the prolonged absence of a brother or sister from the family group.

Of all things, don't cuff the children because they cuffed one another. That gives them the notion that things can be settled by blows, and that is a very wrong notion. Nothing is ever settled that way.

As a general thing children who have not been slapped will not slap each other, but they will strike with their tongues, which is quite as bad in its effects. Personal abuse of one's opponents is a bad habit to cultivate and bitter words make long memories.

It seems to help if the sharp-tongued one is seated beside his mother with some wholesome occupation, while the others go on together. Silent reproof and separation soon impress the offender with his fault. Soaking in useless.

I have no faith in the saying, "The more they fight, the more they love one another." I have seen brothers and sisters nurse a life-long grievance because their childish quarrels were not settled the right way. Teach them that the sun must not set on their wrath and be sure that the offender shows his fault and tries to remedy it. Then the hurt will be forgiven. All children quarrel. Time and training teach them better.
