Hiddleston of this city, which took place Monday afternoon at the home of the bride's grandmother, Mrs. C. S. Shepard of La Grange, Ill., formerly of Omaha. Women of Italy Do Not Have Vote

The biennial convention of the International Suffrage alliance, will meet in Rome, "the foe's stronghold," May 11 to 19. To this remarkable convention will go from all parts of the world, even from such far-away places as Japan, India and China. Hundreds of ardent champions of the movement for the political emancipation of woman will participate.

The founder and president of the Alliance, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, veteran of many battles in behalf of equal suffrage will preside. Mrs. Catt has spent many months in traveling in most of the countries of the world, recently, and she is considered the world leader in this particular field of endeavor.

The women of Italy do not have the right to vote and Premier Mussolini is reported as having said a short time ago: "The time is not ripe yet for granting the women of Italy the right to vote." But it is hoped that holding the convention of the International Suffrage alliance in Rome may have a favorable effect upon this country, as well as many others.

It is assured that many hundreds of delegates will be present, many of them from countries that have not heretofore been presented. No official announcement of the program has been given out, although it is known that the situation in different countries will be considered and special preparations made to further the work of the alliance, in its effort to bring progress and peace to the women of the world.

Drummer Hears Some Bad News.

Drummer is the base alloy. That's found where should be pure joy. —Old Mother Nature.

Every day Drummer the Wood-jockey spent most of his time in the Old Orchard. Once in a while he flew over the edge of the Green Forest, but not often. He didn't like to go that far away from home. He wanted to be where he could get back quickly any time he felt like it, and peep in and see Mrs. Drummer sitting on the eggs. He hadn't told any one about those eggs, but every one seemed to know about them. You see they all guessed, because Drummer looked so happy, and because he was alone so much.

What he heard didn't make him comfortable at all.

Drummer lost his appetite. Yes, sir, Drummer lost his appetite. He began to worry. Supposing Chatterer should take it into his head to visit that maple tree in Farmer Brown's dooryard. He would be sure to discover the new home there. He must fly over at once and warn Mrs. Drummer to be on the watch for that red robber.

As soon as he reached his home Drummer poked his head in the doorway and began to talk excitedly. "My dear," said he, "I've heard such bad news this morning! It has quite upset me. I have hurried right over here to tell you. Everybody over in the Old Orchard is so excited over it. What do you think we had better do about it?"

"When I know what it is perhaps I can tell you," replied Mrs. Drummer without appearing in the least excited.

Drummer looked a little foolish. "It's Chatterer, the Red Squirrel!" he hastened to explain. "He was seen over in the Old Orchard early this morning prowling around, and of course every one knows what he was there for. He was there trying to find nests, so that later he may steal the eggs if he gets a chance. Supposing, my dear, he should take it into his head to come over here. What would we do? Oh, dear, I'm so worried!"
