Corded Beef and Cabbage.

Take a nice piece of lean corned brisket and boil it for three hours. If it is not over-salted the water need not be changed. Do not take it suddenly out of the boiling water, but let it stand a while before lifting. Meanwhile in another container get by boil young cabbage, the size of two small fists, first cutting in quarters. Be sure not to boil too long and do not salt until a few minutes before taking up. Cabbage treated delicately is as sweet and attractive as green peas. Place the beef upon a platter and then set the quarters of cabbage wreathwise about it, each section of the vegetables being buttered at the last minute before serving. The success of the dish depends upon its being served piping hot.

Chatterer's Painful Surprise.

Greed is seldom very wise; 'Tis always open to surprise.—Old Mother Nature.

Chatterer the Red Squirrel was greedy. Chatterer was cruel. He didn't think of being cruel. In fact he didn't think anything about it. Cruel people often are cruel because they do not think. Chatterer wanted eggs to eat, and he meant to get those eggs in any way he could. So as he climbed up to the home of Drummer the Woodpecker in the maple tree in Farmer Brown's doorway his one thought was to get a breakfast of those eggs that he felt sure were in Drummer's home.

"I hope there is a lot of them," thought Chatterer as he climbed. "There can't be too many to suit me. I have chosen just the right time, for with drummer out of the way it will be an easy matter either to scare her away. She probably is sitting on those eggs, so I will have to surprise and kill her before I can get the eggs."

Chatterer was in such a hurry and so sure of himself that he wasn't even careful. He started to put his head in at that doorway without first looking to see that everything was as it should be. The instant his nose appeared in that doorway, Mrs. Drummer, who was waiting just inside, drove that sharp, stout bill of her's straight to Chatterer's nose. Chatterer didn't have time to duck. He was so taken by surprise, and the blow of that bill hurt so, that he actually let go his hold. With a little cry of pain he fell down to a branch below. There he caught his claws in the bark, and was safe once more.

It was lucky for Chatterer that Mrs. Drummer had missed both his eyes. Had that bill of hers reached one of those eyes he surely would have lost the sight of it. As it was, he had been struck just above his nose, and that hurt quite enough. Chatterer flew into a dreadful rage. He scrambled back up to that doorway, and oh, the dreadful threats he made. He mentioned all kinds of awful things he would do to Mrs. Drummer, but all the time he took nervous good care not to get his face too close to that little round doorway. Meanwhile Mrs. Drummer said nothing, but waited just inside ready to strike with that stout bill of hers at the first opportunity.

Then Drummer came home. Long before he reached the maple tree he heard Chatterer's voice and guessed where he was. Drummer's heart came right up in his mouth. How he did fly. As soon as he was near enough, he saw Chatterer, and understood what he was trying to do. Drummer didn't hesitate a second. He headed straight for home and landed on the trunk of the tree close to Chatterer. He hit him with his stout bill as hard as he could drive it. Then before Chatterer could recover from this new surprise Drummer took to his wings again and flew to another part of the tree.

Chatterer now had his hands more than full. He had more than he had bargained for. He couldn't watch Drummer and Mrs. Drummer at the same time. While he was watching one the other would take the chance to give him a sharp blow. Suddenly Chatterer decided that he didn't want any eggs this morning. Young birds would be nicer any way. He would wait until those eggs hatched. The young birds would have to be left alone sometimes while their father and mother hunted food for them. He would have a chance then without any risk.

Our Children

Youth's Vagaries.

"What can I do with my daughter? She is 15 and instead of growing closer to me, she is growing farther away. She used to come running to tell me everything that happened. Now she tells nothing. I can't imagine the reason. It came about gradually until now I find myself shut out of her life. She has taken a sudden fancy to the mother of her school chum and tells her the little things she used to tell me! What can I do?"

Just be patient, and keep on loving her and letting her feel it. If, when she was very little, you taught her that she could count on you, if you listened when she talked and sympathized with her and helped with her plans, she will soon come back. Moods and characteristics of adolescence. The children have strange lapses into gaiety or gloom. They take on new ways, sudden likes and dislikes, unreasonable enthusiasm and weird philosophies. Girls who have been rather self-centered become un-like in their self.

Why divide the family at breakfast?

WHY take coffee for yourself, while saying "No" to the children? It is true, as most parents are careful to explain, that little folks should not endanger health and growth through the drug element in coffee and tea, but—

Your health is valuable, too—and their desire for a hot drink with breakfast may be as great as yours.

There's complete satisfaction in Postum, and safety alike for young and old. Postum is a pure cereal beverage. It is coffee-like in color and flavor, but free from any element that can harm. Thousands who are now saying "No" to themselves as well as to the children, as a safeguard against coffee-ills, have found better comfort and better health, in Postum.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer the flavor brought out by boiling fully 20 minutes. The cost of either is about one-half cent a cup.
