

Adele Garrison "My Husband's Love"

The Curious Way Mrs. Durkee Decided Upon a Doctor.

I loosened the grasp of my little friend's clutching fingers and stroked them tenderly, while I debated frantically with myself what answer to give her appeal not to speak of the name of the manly which apparently was haunting her own mind.

"What nonsense to try to decide anything ourselves!" I said lightly. "It may turn out to be rheumatism, or neuralgia of the intercostal muscles, or neuritis."

I had the consciousness of floundering beyond my depth and was relieved to hear a chuckle from my little friend. She is so essentially a creature of joy, with so lively a sense of humor, that even her tragic moments are apt to be interspersed with smiles.

"Of pneumonia, or smallpox, or household's love," she said with an infectious little laugh. "I've been naming over all the possibilities for weeks. But, Madge, and again the shadow of terror came into her eyes. "I must see some good physician right away."

"Of course," I agreed. "I'll dress and we'll go right away, anywhere you say. I had planned to take that 4 o'clock train to Bridgehampton."

She clutched my arm again.

"Please," she pleaded, "wait to go out there until tomorrow. Then we won't have to hurry through anything, and you can go out home with me tonight and take your time about going on."

Madge Helps Mrs. Durkee.

In the face of her need of me, I was ashamed of the reluctance and the pang of disappointment which seized me at her suggestion. The prospect of seeing my small son, which Dick's unexpected departure had given me, seemed a decade distant as it was, and Mrs. Durkee's request increased the time to a century at least. But, her pitiful plight was paramount to everything else—I recognized that—and I flatter myself that she guessed nothing of my real feelings as I responded enthusiastically.

"Why, that will be splendid! It's been an age since I was out there. Now, what is your plan? Have you any particular physician in mind?"

"Yes, I have." She nodded her head with decision. "He's a doctor to whom a friend of mine always went here in New York before she died. He's an old man, but he's awfully nice. I went with her once, and I liked his ways very much. He isn't so snippy as a lot of the doctors are."

"I'll Make Him See You."

I felt an annoyed impulse to shake her. Here, with a mysterious malady menacing her which called for the best doctor obtainable, she was choosing her physician for his agreeable ways, instead of for his skill. It was a feminine idiosyncrasy not monopolized by my little friend, however, and I reflected comfortingly that before the little woman committed herself to any course of treatment, Alfred must be consulted.

So with carefully controlled voice, I moved toward the telephone and took down the directory.

"What is his name?" I asked, "and have you made an appointment with him?"

"Oh, dear, no!" she answered, in wide-eyed astonishment. "What a funny name! Until you spoke, I never thought of making an appointment. I just thought I'd walk in. Do you suppose he'll be too busy to see me today after noon?"

"I'll make him see you," I returned, smiling encouragingly at her. "Tell me his name, and I'll get on his trail immediately."

"It's something with a Fox in it," she returned, knitting her brows into a frown. "It begins with Fox, and the last of it is something I like. Let me see—what's the name of those flowers you're so crazy about, those tall ones like bells in the spring?"

"Foxglove!" I queried, suppressing a laugh with difficulty.

"That's the name of the flowers, but not of the man," she retorted. "Now, what is that other word?"

"Suppose I look under the names beginning with Fox," I suggested.

"Where does he live?"

"Eighteenth street, over east of the avenue somewhere. And I've got his name—Foxham, Dr. Philip Foxham. I knew the last part of it was something I liked to eat."

Beatrice Fairfax Problems That Perplex

Worried: When people are prejudiced on the subject of religion it is best for them not to marry outside of their faith. Gradually less of the young man.

School Girl: Durable, plain clothes are attractive of selected with care. It is not necessary to have a great variety of clothes to be well dressed. Sweaters and skirts are popular among the school set. Gingham, tissues, voiles and ratine make pretty summer dresses.

A Mother: Why not suggest to your daughter that she entertain her friends at home. Let her see that you are interested in her good times and perhaps you can win her confidence.

Bennie: Yes, Bonnie, I do approve of young people marrying when the young man is prepared to make a home for his bride. It is a great mistake to rush into marriage before you are ready for it. I would not only advise you to wait until you have finished school, but recommend that you "land a job" before you start on your matrimonial venture. If the girl loves you she will be willing to wait.

Patricia: Your parents must have some good reason for disapproving of your friendship with the young man. You are far too young to marry and probably not capable of seeing his faults. Remember this, dear, your parents have your interests at heart

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

A Letter from Mrs. Ward Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Springfield, Ohio.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound proved a splendid medicine for me before my fourth child was born. With the first three I had been sick and weak, and had sick headaches twice a week. I couldn't keep enough food down to do me any good, and my work was left undone many a time. My sister-in-law told me to take the Vegetable Compound when I began to have the same old dreadful sickness and headaches and was so worn out. Since then I have only had two headaches, had a good appetite and scarcely lost a meal. I have a fine, healthy baby girl who has never had a sick day. The nicest part is that I am healthy, too. It did me a lot of good, and if I should ever have another baby I will take your medicine at once."—Mrs. BESSIE WARD, 1027 Park Avenue, Springfield, Ohio.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system.
